'WONDERFUL TO BE HOME'

By JACK SCOTT

"Exhausted, relieved and grateful."

These were the emotions of 21-year-old Nick George Olah and his slim, attractive, 23-year-old wife, Linda as they faced their first day of asylum in Victoria.

The pair slept until noon today in the neat, brown clapboard cottage that they asked should be described only as "near a lake in Victoria."

Tall, thin and blonde, wearing stylish corduroy trousers and jackets, the quiet-spoken young Hungarian Canadian said, "We're too tired to think of what our next move will be. We're pretty broke, too. But its wonderful to be home in Canada. Its really beautiful here. I love the peace and quiet of this place. Who knows? Maybe we could make this our home."

Olah said he was grateful for his "rescue" by University of victoria Student Council President Norman Wright.

"I couldn't have left on my own from San Francisco, but I knew I wouldn't have a chance if I'd stayed there," he said, referring to the indictment against him for failing to answer his draft call.

His slight, tall, wife, wearing a blue mini-skirt and high leather boots, her thick blond hair falling to her waist, said that they had packed only essential clothing, for their hurried departure with Wright.

Left behind, she said, were pain-killing pills for her husband, who complained this morning of pain in his lungs. Wright had arranged for medication when the couple awoke at noon today.

Olah said they would remain in seclusion for two or three days "to think things over and get rested" and then

Uvic Students Outstep FBI

Young Canadians Spirited Home

A cloak-and-dagger University of Victoria rescue team spirited a young Canadian from under the nose of the FBI last weekend.

Student council president Norman Wright flew to San Francisco Saturday morning, returning the same day with Nick George Olah, 21. His wife Linda flew to Vancouver Monday.

Although a Canadian citizen, Olah had been held in the United States for several months on draft evasion charges.

In San Francisco today a court reporter said Olah had been freed on bond last week and had court permission to leave the district. He was scheduled to appear there Feb. 12 on a charge of failing to report for induction into the U.S. armed forces in June, 1968.

Last Wednesday the Vancouver Sun (which published a copyright story of the Olah rescue this morning) ran a letter from the Canadian couple appealing for help.

"We desperately want out of this insane country and to come back home," the letter signed by the young husband stated.

Letter Spurs Rescue Attempt

It was the letter, brought to the attention of Wright at Uvic late last week, that touched off the successful rescue bid.

A telephone contact with the Olahs brought little response.

Mrs. Olah told Wright she had been instructed by their lawyer Michael Kennedy not to discuss the case with anyone because of the U.S. conspiracy laws.

Sensing the hesitancy Wright asked Mrs. Olah if she feared the telephone was bugged.

The young wife replied that there were indications that it was.

Wright terminated the conversation with a promise to send money and renew the contact at a later date.

The next two days were spent checking out the Olah story, raising funds for the rescue bid and planning the hour-by-hour, minute-by-minute schedule.

Wright said the main difficulty lay in establishing contacts in San Francisco.

"I had only marginal contacts with people down there and I had to keep distance between these kids and myself because of the conspiracy thing," Wright said.

Raised Cash for Air Fares

But he did make contact and he did manage to raise $800 toward air fares and additional expenses.

After arriving in San Francisco the cloak-and-dagger effort began in earnest.

First came a change of clothes and a discreet telephone call to the Olahs. A clandestine meeting was set for 1:30 p.m. in Union Square.

The Olahs, under extreme pressure in the U.S. for the past four months, were at first suspicious of Wright. Even proof of identity failed to convince them that he was a fellow Canadian and a friend.

He said his father had put up the $1,000 bail required to obtain his temporary release from jail "and he just can't afford to lose that kind of money."

There was also the fear that fleeing prosecution and jumping bail could be considered extraditable offences leaving Olah open to forced return to the U.S.

And there was still the unspoken fear that Wright really was not who he claimed to be.

Asked when his doubts about Wright finally eased Olah answered "not until the plane actually took off. I never let him out of my sight till then."

Originally Olah was scheduled to leave San Francisco with Wright on the 4:45 p.m. flight. But on arrival at the

TYPHOID STRIKES ORONSAY CREW

VANCOUVER (CP) — The P & O ocean liner Oronsay was held in quarantine for four hours today as health authorities checked the crew and passengers for typhoid.

A spokesman for the line said six crew members taken off the Oronsay at California ports had been confirmed as suffering from the infectious fever. Nine others were reported sick aboard the vessel here.

Underground Railway Built in a Hurry

By BOB MITCHELL

University of Victoria student president Norman Wright today told the Times how he and other students organized an underground railway to bring Nick George Olah and his wife Linda over the border to Victoria.

They are now staying in Langford at an address Wright would not disclose.

On Thursday, Jan. 8, Nels Granewall, Uvic admissions and awards officer, contacted Wright to ask him whether any help could be given to the pair after he learned of their predicament from a letter to the Vancouver Sun.

By 3:30 a.m. Friday the decision was made to go to San Ffancisco and bring the Olahs back.

Wright spoke to Linda Olah from Victoria and she told him they had been advised by their lawyer, Michael Kennedy, that if they discussed their case with anyone Nick's bail would be cancelled and he would be sent back to jail on conspiracy charges.

On Friday Wright borrowed money in Victoria, travelled to Vancouver, met a representative of UBC student council, thereby setting up a 24-hour phone connection between San Francisco and B.C.

Arriving in San Francisco at 10 a.m. Saturday, Wright was met by friends of Victoria students who took him downtown to a rendezvous with the Olahs. Wright's mission at this point turned into a cloak-and-dagger-comedy-drama.

Both he and the Olahs were apprehensive of informers sabotaging their plans.

Wright booked tickets for himself and Nick under the phoney names of Bennet and Johnson. Linda was to stay in California as a cover. Wright and Olah had no trouble as they flew from San Francisco to Vancouver direct at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Olah told U.S. immigration officers he was returning to Ontario to visit his parents. Linda came to Vancouver on another flight Monday.

Both are now open to various charges such as conspiracy, and bail jumping.

'They Took Away His Guitar And Forced Him to Turn On'

The father of Douglas Hampton, 18, whose body was found in a Saanich pond Tuesday, said today drugs were forced on his son Saturday night.

John Hampton of 850 Royal Oak Ave., said his son had never taken drugs until the Saturday night he was reported missing after attending a Cordova Bay party.

Friends at the family home today said that when asked to take drugs the boy had at first refused but gave in after his guitar was taken away from him.

They said that if he had taken drugs before, he might have been better able to handle the situation and the tragedy might not have happened.

NO DETAILS

"There are some interesting factors which have developed during the investigation," said deputy chief Robert Peterson. "All of these will be collected and presented at an inquest when it is called."

He declined to say what the "factors" were and would make no comment on the role of drugs, if any, in the case.

Hampton and a friend apparently left the house party about 10 Saturday night and hitch-hiked south on Cordova Bay Road. Peterson said the driver who dropped them at Royal Oak Avenue has come forward but would not say what he had told officers.

The deputy said police would be pleased to hear from anyone in the area "who has anything to offer" on the case.

Throughout Sunday Hampton's friends and family searched for the missing boy. Police were called in at dusk. They were joined by soldiers and civil defence workers Monday and the boy's body was spotted at the edge of the pond Tuesday morning.

The pond, on Firbank Farm, is 15 feet at its deepest.

The deputy said that while searchers left many tracks in an adjacent muddy field, there were prints of boots similar to Hampton's.

Is there a possibility of foul play?

"We're not ruling it out," said Peterson. "But there's nothing at the moment to lead us to suspect it."

Young people questioned by reporters about the incident have mentioned the drug belladonna.

At the request of the Times, Charles Barber of Cool-Aid talked to some who have used the drug. They report the effects are much stronger than those produced by LSD.

"The hallucinations are much wilder. You can lose all

LABOR SAYS NO TO PAY FREEZE

TORONTO (CP) — Major sectors of the business community have announced support, with reservations, for the government's anti-inflation policies but there was no immediate indication of a change in organized labor's hard-line position.

But William Mahoney, Canadian director of the 150,000 member United Steelworkers of America, reiterated labor's belief that wage restraint formulas proposed by the federal prices and incomes commission would only permit the rich to get richer while the poor get poorer.

The federal government has asked industry to delay price increases until March 1.

Commissions to Prove Law Need Not Be an Ass

By JOHN MIKA

British Columbians stand on the threshhold of a new era of the law in their lives.

It will be characterized by a continual and official effort, for the first time, to keep all statutes and legal practice in sensible balance with a rapidly changing society.

The provincial government's Law Reform Commission, heralded by legislation at the last session, is about to begin operations in B.C.

And the federal government plans to introduce legislation this spring to create a national Law Reform Commission to oversee its jurisdiction.

The purpose of both can be summed up as a permanent effort to prove the law need not be an ass.

The B.C. commission can be of great service to the public if it looks beyond reform of "lawyer's law," of anomalies in statute books and obsolescence in legal procedures says UBC assistant professor Jerome Atrens.

That's precisely what it intends to do, says E. Davie Fulton — a one-time reformist justice minister of Canada now in private practice in

'We Will Look Out For Injustices'

Vancouver — who is the first chairman of the provincial commission.

Anomalies and archaic court practices will of course be examined and solutions recommended to Attorney-General Leslie Peterson, Fulton said in an interview.

But much ground has been broken by law reform commissions which have been operating five years in Ontario and more than a year in Alberta.

"Of course we will always be on the lookout for areas of patent injustices . . . where the working of the law either no longer accords with what is fair or sensible in the light of developing social conscience or where in fact it militates against an individual," said Fulton.

"Judges have been known to say, for instance, 'this in my view is an unfortunate result but there's the law and I'm not here to make the law, only enforce it'.

"Our commission will always be on the lookout for that but I don't think we can just be concerned with anomalies.

FULTON
. . . reformist

"We will, of course, have to give priority to eight or nine subjects and the sensible starting point that commends itself to me are those areas with the largest impact on the individual.

"The law of sale of goods, the law of landlord and tenant, indeed real property laws generally — those are the sorts of things I feel we will be inclined to start with."

Some of these laws are direct copies of English statutes which were in existence when B.C. was a colony and have since been modified substantially in Britain while remaining intact here.

"They need changing — not because they are English laws but because they are 100 or 150 years old and totally out of date," said Fulton.

Michael Harcourt, a staff lawyer with Vancouver's Inner-City Project, says the poor particularly suffer from the antiquity of many provincial laws regulating business practices on the 19th century laissez-faire principle.

undertaken in this area, Harcourt outlined some of the directions the commission will be urged to recommend.

"The legal doctrine of caveat emptor, which is 'let the buyer beware', is out of date now," said Harcourt. "In the good old farm days you could look the horse in the mouth and test his hooves and you probably had some background in your own community on what you were buying.

"But in today's society there is no way the average Joe knows what is going on in a television set or a car, stereo or furniture of any sort.

"Most buyers today cannot be called reasonable men in the legal sense, because they just don't have the knowledge. The onus should be on the manufacturer of the goods and the seller of the goods while still leaving some responsibility on the buyer to show some prudence and good common sense."

Fulton made it clear that not only statutes will be revieved but also "any (cabinet) regulations having the airport they found the terminal FBI agents looking for a dope-runner who had just arrived from Mexico.

LATER FLIGHT

Wright and the young couple waded to await a later flight.

During the waiting period Linda Olah, still suspicious of Wright, telephoned Uvic to again confirm his identity.

Even here problems continued. The people at the Student's Union Building were reluctant to give out any information on Wright thinking Mrs. Olah an FBI agent.

"They thought I was the FBI looking for information and the more they became suspicious the more I became suspicious," she said.

WRIGHT
. . . organized coup

By 8 p.m. the suspicions still lingered but the Olahs had made their dicision.

They were coming home.

Seats were booked in the name of Mr. Bennett (Wright's cover name) and Mr. and Mrs Johnson, the Olah's cover name.

At Vancouver Olah had to drop his cover and assume his own name to tally name and passport.

Although in Canada the Olah's troubles were not over.

As the trio walked out into the main terminal the public address system asked "Mr. Johnson" from the San Francisco flight to report to immigration.

"We just kept on walking," Wright said.

For Olah it could prove to be only a temporary respite from the troubles which started for him four months ago.

The son of a Hungarian freedom fighter who came to Vancover during the revolution Olah was 10 when he took up residence in Canada.

BOTH REMARRIED

Shortly after his father and mother obtained a divorce and both remarried.

When he was 17 Olah decided to visit his father in San Francisco and attended high school there for his final year in grade school.

"It is mandatory for all male high school students to register for the draft," Olah said. "So I complied although I was a Canadian citizen."

After leaving high school Olah made arrangements to attend Sheridan College, Brampton, Ontario. Before he left for Canada he received his induction notice—a notice he chose to ignore.

After a year in college Olah was informed that his father was extremely ill in San Francisco and he and his wife-to-be immediately planned a visit.

That was last August and within days of arriving in California Olah was arrested on an old traffic violation. Checking out that violation the police came across the draft-dodging charge and called in the FBI.

Fined for his traffic violation Olah was told that he couldn't be released until the draft charge was cleared up. He declined to pay the traffic fine.

HELP PEOPLE

Olah says he contacted the Canadian consulate in San Francisco and was informed that "it was not the policy of the consulate to help people involved with the draft."

Olah finally paid a lawyer $750 to arrange $1,000 bail via Olah's father.

"I was shackled and handcuffed and escorted across the city by two marshals," Olah said. "They put a chain around my waist and linked the handcuffs to the chain."

After the hearing Olah was released on bail and a trial date was set for next month.

Kennedy, lawyer for the young Canadian, contacted in San Francisco, said as a lawyer his advice to Olah was to remain in the U.S. and face the charge of draft evasion.

"But as an individual I understand what he did," Kennedy added. "I don't interpret his case as the fault of inadvertently registering, the fault is entirely due to the draft board. He asked for a form to sign because he was a Canadian citizen and did not intend to become a United States citizen.

"It was a deliberate case of the draft board failing to give proper information to him."

During his final weeks in the U.S. Olah in desperation had written to Prime Minister Trudeau for help. He was informed by reply that the matter had been referred to the department of external affairs.

Permits 'Must' Be Issued

The municipal affairs department cannot stop issuing building permits in View Royal.

This information was given the Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health Tuesday after two letters were sent requesting that no building permits be issued.

The board has warned of health hazards from inadequate septic tanks in the unorganized area west of Esquimalt. A sewerage referendum was defeated by View Royal residents last month.

Since the correspondence, the board was told, the Capital Regional District has taken over responsibility for regional planning and building inspection services in the unorganized areas.

Health inspector Laurel Benham said there is one course of action which has always been open to the board—any applications for new construction can only be allowed if the soil on the site is adequate to contain a sewage disposal system.

Ald. Frank Waring of Saanich, elected vice-chairman of the board, said definite action should be taken where septic tanks are not working properly and are a health hazard.

He was told that the senior medical health officer, Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread has the authority to do this.

Dr. Whitbread told the board that if the ground permits and the regulations are met, "we can't refuse building permits.

"We can refuse to grant a permit for an alternate system and this we have been doing, except where it is clearing up an existing problem."

An alternate system, he explained, is adding four feet of topsoil or installing holding tanks for sewage effluent.

In other business, the board decided to write Victoria city council that representatives of the Victoria Medical Society and the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. attend board meetings as "observers," without vote and without voice—unless asked their opinions.

A letter from city council said Victoria is opposed to these representatives being "members" of the board.

The first attempt, just over three months ago, produced a number of applicants but none of them was hired.

Now, said Mayor Hugh Curtis who is also chairman of personnel committee, the search has been expanded.

The management consultant firm of Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company currently engaged in a study of the municipal administrative structure has advertised in Vancouver.

The position was held by John Bericoff, whose resignation was announced in early October effective Nov. 30 when he became assistant secretary of the Capital Regional District.

might return to Brampton, Ontario, where Nick is to enrol in a course of creative photography.

Wright told the Times that the small cottage had been loaned by a friend sympathetic to the Olah's dilemma, but that they would probably remain no more than two days at the retreat.

Olah said he had fled with the approval of his father in San Francisco. "He knows what prison is like from his days behind the iron curtain," he said, "and gave me his blessing."

Neighbors Support Drop-In

The Saanich youth drop-in centre has a new home.

Originally located in a bowling club house at Hampton Park, the new centre is in a municipal house at Hyacinth Park which was converted to a changeroom but is not needed for one year by the parks department.

Ald. Alan Newberry, chairman of the youth committee, said the new centre will be completely under municipal jurisdiction and provide "a second home" for youths to spend evening hours.

He said he has spoken to several neighbors and reported good support for the newly-located centre, which opened Monday night.

Most common way to take the drug is in powder form and the effects are weird visions and sensations, "some horribly frightening and others beautiful."

Barber was also told that as long as the user doesn't exert himself, his condition might go undetected. But even walking produces faulty vision and dizziness.

Asthma inhalant, available from drug stores without a prescription, has also been mentioned and reports suggest someone "high" on it experiences a fierce thirst, loss of balance and sense of direction.

DRUG USE RAMPANT IN RICH-AREA SCHOOL

GROSSE POINTE, Mich. (AP) — A random survey indicates that half of the 1,000 high school seniors in this wealthy Detroit suburb have used illegal drugs at least once.

"It's definitely time that our parents become aware that their boys and girls are no longer just playing jacks down in the basement," said school superintendent Theos Anderson.

New Home Recipe Reducing Plan

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of unsightly fat right in your own home. Make this home recipe yourself. It's easy, no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran Concentrate. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full a day as needed and follow the Naran Plan.

If your first purchase does not show you a simple easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't disappear from neck, chin, arms, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow this easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears—how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

Sensational New Hearing Aid Costs Less Than 10 Cents Per Year To Operate

Space age technology has come to the hearing aid industry. A new hearing aid has been developed that actually costs less than ten cents per year to operate. This is a far cry from the $25 to $70 a year the average hearing aid costs to run. Aid also automatically controls speech interfering noises and can be custom adjusted for correct hearing on the spot. WEATHER SYNOPSIS

It was extremely cold in northern B.C. again this morning. Both Fort Nelson and Liard River reported 51 below. Snow continued over most of the interior of the province but Penticton reported light rain with a temperature of 38. Occasional freezing rain occurred at Hope and in the Kootenays. Showers will persist over the south coast today but partial clearing will occur tonight as a ridge of high pressure builds offshore. The Arctic front will remain nearly stationary from north of Cranbrook to just south of Kamloops thence westward across the Charlottes. Snowflurries will persist in most inland areas and along the north coast.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

All of the economists and the stock market experts are wondering whether the U.S. will have a recession this year. We all hope everything in the economy remains prosperous and strong, but some of us are aware that if a recession does come the people in the U.S. are going to be healthier than usual.

That is what has happened in every recession and even in the great depression. Students of trends in public health have marvelled over the many years to learn that during times of business recession the national rate of sickness is lower.

The weather is responsible, in part. The statistics show that when the frequency and severity of storms are lessened, and the temperatures are higher, we tend to have economic recession and less sickness. Some of the steam is gone and people are more relaxed.

King's Slaying Still Not Fully Explained

By
NICHOLAS VON HOFFMAN
The Washington Post

They will not be of one race only. Dr. King had a huge white following when he was alive and has a larger one now, almost two years after his murder.

If there are any future historians they may write that he was the most important public firgure of his time so that men like John Kennedy, J. Edgar Hoover, Earl Warren and Bull Connor may be principally remembered for their conncection with Dr. King.

He wasn't a man of original thought, not really creative, but he could recognize other people's new ideas and he wasn't too proud to pick them up and use them.

He did this with the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee.

Taking up the ideas which it couldn't disseminate, he propagated them, incorporated them into his own work. Snick saw the issues first and more clearly, but Dr. King could explain them to millions of people and persuade them to act.

He began as a black leader of black men and women; on the day of his death he was a black leader of people of all races, and on the question of Vietnam his following was principally white.

It's only now that blacks in large number are starting to manifest opposition to the war.

Some people who admired him said that in a way it was a blessing he died when he did; they said he was slipping, that he was losing his hold on the masses and that he was too much a rural preacher to be effective in the northern cities where the worst of the struggle had moved.

Dr. King had had those dips in fortune before. His was a leadership that went in alternately bright and dim phases as events and the public mood fluctuated.

That is to be expected of a man who wan't ever able to organize a steady base and whose underlying message always had to overcome his considerable defects as a calculating player of political games.

For all that, he was irreplaceable. When he died his funeral pyre was the burning of 20 American cities.

When men such as Dr. King pass on, their work is uncompleted because what they desire to accomplish is so grandly large. They leave us, not so much with work unfinished, as with ideals clarified and strengthened. The greatest of these, perhaps, was non-violence.

Dr. King made non-violence as manly, as courageous an ideal as gunslingling, although an ideal it remains, given the continued tempo of murders in the U.S.

The political murders are the worst. They destroy fidelity and trust like no other crimes. They're never forgotten and years after the victims have been buried people ruminate over them, feed their paranoia and grudges.

KING . . . man of the decade?

Nothing anybody can do can allay such a reaction, but it helps a little if the crimes are as fully and completely explained as is humanly possible.

That is all the more important when there appears to be some substance to the ruminations. U.S. political murders, at least those of the last decade, all have blacks, liberals or radicals as their victims.

Let's hope it's simply coincidence that Republicans, conservatives and reaction-

'Political Murders Are the Worst'

aries don't get killed, but still the situation is such that the very least that can be done is to put everything that is known about these crimes on the public record.

That hasn't happened with Dr. King. The suspiciion persists that James Earl Ray was part of a conspiracy. People like Jack Anderson of The Washington Merry-Go-Round have tried to discourage the talk, saying it's circulated by Dr. King's collaborators in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to help them raise money, but such scoffing won't sell.

The official explanation of how Dr. King was murdered can only be accepted by the gullible and those blessed with great faith in what politicians tell them.

From time to time officials connected with the case have said that Ray did it because he was a racist, but they haven't produced evidence to show he was more of a racist than a lot of other people who don't commit murder.

The prosecution contended that this man broke out of the Missouri State penitentiary in 1967, roamed about the country for a year making his living by crime and then made his way to Memphis where he stalked Dr. King and killed him.

After the murder they say that he escaped to Atlanta, Montreal, London, Lisbon and then back to London and he did it all on money he'd either saved up from profits of older crimes or by committing new ones the particulars of which they're rather vague on.

It may all be true. It's possible but it give James Earl Ray a career profile different from that which most small-time crooks have. Usually that type doesn't make much from their crimes and what they make they spend.

Ray himself has persistently said there was a conspiracy. He said it when he pleaded guilty for the murder and he's said it since. Just because he says it doesn't make it so, but even if he did do it alone there are many questions about how he did it and how he escaped.

It was not a simple case and before he pleaded guilty the prosecution had lined up 90 witnesses to testify to all its puzzling details.

Even the judge, the late W. Preston Battle, confessed there was much which needed explaining: "Like others I would truly like to know how Ray actually found the spot from which to fire. How did Ray know where Rev. King would be? How did he determine the type of weapon to be used? What are the details of the actual purchase and selection of the weapon? Was he alone in surveillance of the Lorraine Motel (where the murder took place)? Most puzzling of all is his escape from Memphis."

The judge wan't sure that a trial would answer all these questions: "It is an error to assume that the prosecution would have had a chance to cross-examine Ray about his finances or how he escaped from the Missouri State penitentiary, or about persons who gave him any aid before or after the slaying of Dr. King.

"That assumes Ray would have taken the stand. I doubt very seriously that defence counsel would have risked placing Ray in such a position. In fact, as I understand it, this all along has been one of the main problems between Ray and various men who have acted for the defence. They counseled against it, and he kept wanting to take the risk."

The lawyers may have been right then, but the trial's over now and Ray still wants to talk. He can't be tried again and he keeps saying from his maximum secruity cell that he has a story to tell.

It may be that he's some kind of nut. Many people believe he just wants attention and fame. He's already got that.

When his bullet struck Dr. King, at that second he got into the history books just as George Wallace did by trying to bar the highway from Selma to Montgomery.

Let a congressional committee subpoena Ray, or give him an opportunity to testify in a court by trying him for a lesser charge like violating Dr. King's civil rights, or form another one of those commissions to take his story down while he stays in the penitentiary, but some way should be found before he's murdered.

An admisinstration like the one in office with such a fine nose for conspiracies should be up to the task of determining if there was one here.

Quebec 'Glaringly Silent'

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec has been "glaringly silent on Indian aspirations," Harold Cardinal, president of the Alberta Indian Association, charged Tuesday.

He was amplifying remarks he made in Ottawa Monday that Indians feared and distrusted Quebec more than any other provincial government in Canada.

In an interview, he said French-Canadians have not learned what it means to be a minority and—like English-Canadians in the rest of the country—act as a majority.

He said Alberta, despite a conservative Social Credit government, has been the most receptive to Indian needs and hopes.

The 24-year-old author of The Unjust Society said it is unrealistic for Indians to believe they can continue traditional farming, hunting and trapping indefinitely.

But where he would welcome new industries to produce other forms of income on Indian lands, Mr. Cardinal said the federal government seems to prefer moving Indians away from the rural environments they know into industrial areas.

A federal government white paper has proposed turning over responsibility for Indian affairs—now a federal domain—to the provincial governments.

Many Indian groups have opposed the plan as a hypocritical way to pass the buck on Indian claims.

Revolution in Viewpoint

THE GRAVITY OF THE POLLUTION problem in the United States has at last been given official recognition by President Nixon in a "now or never" measure designed to combat the progressive destruction of the environment by garbage and wastes created by man and his industrial activities. Mr. Nixon's response to the situation was late and limited, but there is cause to believe that he is now thoroughly convinced of the need for far-reaching action to counteract the deterioration of man's living conditions which arises from the modern way of life.

Although Congress voted $800 millions to set up a Clean Water Restoration Act, Mr. Nixon's plans appeared to be geared only to a $200-millions effort. But the basic principle of new policy, that the country must "create and maintain conditions under which man and nature can exist in productive harmony," is a great step forward in official recognition of the danger, and the stipulation that all government departments must take into account the environmental impact of all actions they propose, could mark the beginning of a whole new approach to man's relationship to the planet.

In this connection, the New York Times remarks editorially that "with poisons pouring into the air at a rate of 130 million tons a year and great bodies of water turning into cesspools, the question is no longer one of comfort or esthetics but of life and death." The paper adds the observation that "the President's warning that huge areas may become unlivable by 1980 must be underscored with the observation that many urban regions already fit this description."

It is a significant step that the move on anti-pollution is no longer to be considered as a mere campaign, but as a continuing necessity for man's use of an increasingly crowded planet. The underlying motivation is thus not merely an engineering feat but a social problem which demands solution.

There are many areas in both government and industry—as well as among the people themselves—in which recognition of the crisis is demonstrably reluctant and tardy. What is needed is vigorous leadership, and this must come both from government and individual sources.

Again to quote the New York Times, the new approach should be that "nothing short of a new understanding of the total pattern of man's use of the environment and its resources can keep the nation from drowning in the wastes of its own affluence."

The approach is being recognized in Canada as well as the United States by enlightened persons. But there is sorry — and dangerous—foot-dragging on the part of many industrial interests which see only immediate financial returns rather than the full picture of man's tenure here; and also, incredibly, on the part of many elected representatives at all levels of government who are revealed as being a hundred years behind in their thinking and their perception of what is going on around them.

We can only hope that recognition comes to them before their shortcoming saddles us with costs of restoration and rescue vastly greater than those which now confront us. There could be no sadder epitaph for a person in public affairs than a sign on a man-made wasteland: "I slept while this happened."

Theft in the Woods

IN RECENT YEARS IT HAS been a general policy of major timber concerns to allow the public to use logging roads to reach recreational areas opened up by the roads. The access is limited, justifiably, to times when there is no serious fire hazard and when the logging operations themselves will not be hampered by visitors.

As a result of this concession, between 150,000 and 200,000 British Columbians and tourists have used the roads each year to reach points where they could fish, ski, hunt and enjoy other outdoor activities.

Last year, reports MacMillan Bloedel Limited, the cost of this practice to the company and its employees ran to more than $21,000 in thefts and vandalism. Stolen, among other items, were 34 power saws each costing from $250 to $400, a number of $1,200 portable radios, a 25-ton capacity hydraulic jack and air compressors valued at about $280 each. Other companies could report similar losses.

There is no suggestion that all outdoorsmen who avail themselves of road access participate in these thefts. But some who go into the timber limits do. For the sake of the large majority who are innocent, it seems essential that all road users band themselves together to stamp out such thievery and vandalism. If they don't, they could lose the use of roads to their favored recreation haunts.

The Population Explosion May Fizzle

FEARS OF A MALTHUSIAN population catastrophe have been rendered groundless by agricultural technology according to a new report from the United Nations' Food and Agricultural Organization. Since 1967, the report claims, food production, taken as a whole, has increased at a faster rate than the population. Under-developed areas increased their agricultural production by five per cent in 1967 and two per cent in 1968, with estimates for 1969 showing a continuation of the trend.

These are encouraging figures indeed. But the report also said that while production increased three per cent in Africa, the per capita amount of food available remained stationary. Production in the Near East rose only fractionally and there was an estimated fall of about two per cent in Latin America.

Many third-world countries are close to feeding their populations but food sufficiency is still in delicate balance. Bad weather and drought can wipe out years of painstaking advancement in one season. Any let-down now in efforts to reduce population through birth control would only allow people production to gallop ahead of food production once again. While the world will cheer the reported progress it cannot afford to be complacent yet.

Ten Million Lepers

WHEN CARDINAL LEGER left his high church office in November, 1967, to work among the lepers, his significant action drew world attention briefly to a situation most people had forgotten — the plight of those suffering from the once-dread disease. That situation has been improved partially in recent years—and indeed, during the last four decades two million lepers have been cured. But today the disease is said to afflict 10 million people.

This is the message drawn to public attention by the 17th Annual World Day in Aid of Leprosy Sufferers to be observed on January 25. It is an occasion not solely for sympathetic thought. It is one that should inspire action, individual and through governments to provide the aid which is so sorely needed.

FROM MONTREAL — By RICHARD PURSER

A U of M Plan for All-Party Decisions

PROPONENTS of one of the great mottoes of the 60s, "participatory democracy," got a big boost into the new decade last week with the report of an official commission of the University of Montreal recommending redistribution of power of decision within the university, including student and faculty participation. As the giant of French language higher education in the western hemisphere and the centre of much of Quebec's social and political ferment, the U. of M. is bound to be the subject of much discussion as it debates whether to take a step that could send academic waves across the continent.

Purser

The commission, a joint creation of the Council and Assembly of the university, was set up under lawyer Jules Deschenes in November, 1968, to study the roles of professors and students within the university, the relations between different components of the university, and the university's place in society.

After just over a year of work, the commission has produced a voluminous report with 331 recommendations.

The main recommendations would put students and professors into the governing council and assembly, as well as the councils of the faculties, and would even give non-teaching personnel a certain number of seats at all levels. The customary in-camera deliberations of the various governing councils would be virtually abolished.

'Authentic Collaboration'

The commission also advocated an "authentic collaboration" of the university with its social milieu, including an annual assembly in which it would reveal to the metropolitan community its financial state, its activities and projects, and also open itself to public criticisms and suggestions.

A basic assumption of the report is that all elements composing the university (administration, personnel, professors and students) must be fully participant in its life, the degree of the decision-making role of each reflecting its role in the university as a whole, as well as the effect on each of the decisions made.

The top decision-making council of the university, if the recommendations are adopted, will consist of a rector, four students, four professors, four members of non-teaching personnel, and eight of the eleven others named by the government of the province.

At the next highest level, the university assembly would include the rector and the five vice-rectors, the 18 deans and directors of affiliated colleges, 10 members of personnel, 24 professors, and 24 students, one elected from each faculty and affiliated college and the rest from among the graduate students.

Similar criteria of participation would apply at the faculty level, while each department would have a joint co-ordinating committee of the department head, three to five professors, three to five students, and one to three members of non-teaching personnel.

Noteworthy in all of the above is that representation in governing councils of university elements other than the administration is not token. The other elements, in various combinations, could prove decisive.

Not Averse to Activism

The commission was evidently not averse to social activism in its report. Citing the case of Professor Stanley Gray, the dismissed radical of neighboring English language McGill University, the report spoke of confrontation as possibly being "an enriching reality," as long as the rights to all views remained protected. It warned against the university succumbing to a minority of agitators who might seek to stifle the views of others.

The Deschenes commission operated under certain difficulties owing to the province's unrest last year. The student association pulled out of all university functions and then folded itself up, forcing the commission to go to the university's public opinion research centre to determine student opinion, as student briefs and witnesses were not forthcoming.

Want to Participate

The centre found that while only a minority of students and those soon to be students were in the avant-garde of confrontation politics, few students were ready to let themselves be run without participation in the decisions concerning them. More chillingly, the centre's studies found that most students from the seven Montreal area junior colleges feeding into the U of M were not averse to occupying university premises and conducting study sessions (usually called sit-ins outside Quebec). Many had already shared such experiences.

These studies served as the writing on the wall for commission members in making their recommendations for spreading power far below the customary levels of government and administration.

FROM LONDON — By DAVID HUMPHREYS

Militancy Pays in Affluence Scramble

THE strikes closing many schools in Britain are the most outstanding example of a new militancy in Britain. Teachers are refusing to teach. Farmers are blocking busy streets and hitching cows to parking meters outside Westminster. Even the nurses are holding mass rallies up and down the country.

The mere fact that these groups, representing among them 850,000 disgruntled earners, are militant is news. Farmers' complaints and petitions are one thing; disrupting traffic quite another. Half-day walkouts in selected schools are very different from a school strike on a national scale, shutting 414 schools for two weeks. Sir Ronald Gould, retiring general secretary of the largest teachers' union, the National Teachers' Union, described the present situation as "quite unique and unprecedented in the history of the world."

All three groups have more in common than the boldness of their assertions of rights to a larger slice of the national wealth. They look to the government for their income, teachers and nurses directly, the farmers through a system of guaranteed prices. Together they will test the government's prices and incomes policy, or what may be left of it. Finally, they put the government in an awkward political situation.

In the circumstances it is significant that a consensus in favor of militancy has been reached in these unmilitant fields. Three teachers' unions have come together, overcoming differences and a strong feeling against striking by many women members. The nurses have decided to risk their Florence Nightingale image by admitting that they, too, place money pretty high on the priority list. The farmers are still debating publicly about the wisdom of tough action and the effect it may have on goodwill among the general public.

The country is watching the unusual spectacle of teachers, nurses and farmers following the example of garbage collectors, miners and firemen. Last fall they established the point that militant action pays when a series of strikes resulted in substantial pay increases, well above the officially acceptable figure of 3½ per cent.

Goodwill Questioned

Soon we will know whether the public tolerates closed schools as cheerfully as it countenanced garbage stinking in the streets of London. Many families with working mothers have been inconvenienced, in some cases seriously. Sympathy for the problems of the teaching profession may be offset by the teachers' all-or-nothing attitude and their refusal to accept arbitration. The extent of the teachers' goodwill is questionable at the outset.

Taking this into account in the knowledge that any teachers' pay increase can come only at the taxpayers' expense, the government may settle for much less than the teachers' want, although it is reluctant to enforce a settlement by legislation.

At the root of the whole problem is a government prices and incomes policy further eroded with every successful strike. The policy of controls over prices and incomes lapsed at the end of last year. It allowed for wage settlements of 3½ per cent per year, exceptional circumstances apart. With last fall's strikes, the exception became the rule. The government retained, at a cost of duress in the Labor party, the power to delay wage or price settlements for four months. Now the surrender of even that measure of compulsion is imminent. If all the latest indications are correct, the government will bow to opposition from the unions to the possibility of control over prices and from the employers to the prices side of the powers.

The uncertainty is compounded by the government's special concern for the plight of the lower-paid workers. This was enunciated in a white paper, published in December, as the basis for the 1970 incomes policy. Here the government agreed that just settlements for the lower paid would fall above the "normal range" now estimated at between 2½ and 4½ per cent. The lower paid have yet to be defined and a teacher earning less than a garbage collector might be forgiven for considering himself low paid.

The white paper reflected the government's trepidation over compulsion, understandable in view of the party strife it has caused. But in place of strife it proposed a choice where there can be no choice for militant self-interest groups.

First the government in its wisdom pointed to the correct policy. "The government believes that what the community as a whole really wants, is a steady rise in real incomes coupled with a broad measure of price stability. This is what the policy aims at giving the community over the next few years."

Depending on Choices

In the next sentence comes the beginning of the end: "Whether it succeeds depends not just on what the government does, but on what choices individual men and women take."

Now, the end itself, as the policy is disowned; "People can have large increases in pay — but with inflation which takes away much of the benefit. Or they can have smaller money increases whose real value is greater because prices are kept stable and steady expansion is possible."

The next paragraph states the obvious, that this is a voluntary policy, operating through the decisions of employers and unions. Is this enough in a climate of self-interest over national interest?

The government will be hard put in the months ahead to set an example of the national interest when the party interest is at stake in an election campaign. Chancellor of the Exchequer Roy Jenkins opened the New Year by lifting the £50 restriction on travel and it is taken here as the first of the campaign goodies. The scramble for a larger share of the country's affluence is on and militancy pays.

From the Times of Jan. 14, 1910:

Victoria is apparently about to enter a period of unprecedented prosperity unexampled in her history, according to His Worship Mayor Hall.

HBC Anniversary

This year will be celebrated all across the Dominion of Canada as the 300th Anniversary of the founding of the Hudson's Bay Company.

From cities to villages, districts to Fort or Trading Post sites, this will be a year to pause and honor the men who carved these outposts, risked their lives on land and waterways, and, above all, were the cause of our foundation as a nation today.

As a Canadian, and native-born British Columbian, I would urge all schools and fraternal organizations to ensure our young people be given ample opportunity to study an interesting part of our history. Here on Vancouver Island, we have museums connected with the HBC.

In Victoria, the Old Craigflower School Museum contains many of the things used by these pioneers, as does Craigflower Manor across the Bridge.

Throughout this year, I would hope visits could be organized for young people both up and down the Island.

The Native Sons of B.C. would be only too pleased to give advice on any proposed visits, as they share as custodian of both the school and bastion—Garnet L. Young, Historian, Post No. 1, Victoria, Native Sons of B.C., 1431 Richardson.

What Happened to the GP?

What's happened to the General Practitioner? The real family physician is no more. The modern waiting room is crowded. Chivalry

May I please use your column to mention a most outstanding act of chivalry performed by Mr. McMillan's young girl (8 years old) in going into her home twice at the beginning of the fire there to save her pet dog.

I might also point out that such an outstanding act deserved more than just being mentioned.—"A Lover of Animals."

One Man's Crusade To Control Military

By HARRY CROWE

John Kenneth Galbraith's pamphlet-length paperback, How To Control The Military, is the most powerful and persuasive attack upon the role of the military-industrial complex in the United States which I have seen.

He is preaching a crusade. But, as he puts it, it is "not an anti-military crusade. Generals and admirals and soldiers, sailors and airmen, are not the object of attack. The purpose is to return the military establishment to its traditional position in the American political system.

"It was never intended to be an unlimited partner in the arms industry. Nor was it meant to be a controlling voice in foreign policy.

"Any general or admiral who rose to fame before World War II would be surprised and horrified to find that his successors in the profession of arms are now commercial accessories of General Dynamics."

Galbraith has had many year of experience in and around Washington. He says that the armed forces and the corporations supplying them, and living off them, like General Dynamics, Lockheed, McDonnell Douglas and North American Rockwell, are making policy decisions and providing instructions to the Congress and the White House.

He says: "This is an age when the young are being instructed, rightly, though with vast solemnity, to respect constitutional process and seek change within the framework of the established political order.

"But, here, alas, we find the assumed guardians of that order, men with no slight appreciation of their righteousness and respectability calmly turning it upside down themselves."

Economist Galbraith says that we live in an age in which power of decision has passed from the consumer to the producer, from the car driver to General Motors, from the citizen to General Dynamics. He states: "The first we can survive. The second, most likely, we cannot."

He feels that it is not a matter of military power, or of capitalist power, or of a conspiracy, so much as an issue of organization. It is a question of a complex of military and industrial entities, as an "organization," in an age of organization, developing "a life and purpose and truth of its own."

The actions of the organization cease to be those which serve the large public interest. They become those which serve the goals of the bureaucracy itself, and "action in the organization interest, or in response to the bureaucratic truth, can thus be a formula for public disservice or even public disaster."

Rationalizing the Vietnam blunder is a main example of bureaucratic truth: A world threatened by unified Communist forces which had chosen the oppressive government of South Vietnam as the next target and a few thousand guerrillas as the weapon; a civil conflict becomes an ideological conflict for all mankind — but just to be fought in the jungle of Vietnam; Saigon dictators become "incipient Jeffersonians"; graft and rigged elections become characteristics of democracy; defeats become victories.

JOHN KENNETH GALBRAITH

Rationalizing the arms race is another: No agreement with the U.S.S.R. can be watertight, therefore, none is possible; the conflict with Communism is man's ultimate battle; the national interest is total, that of man inconsequential. So we can accept "75 million casualties if it forces the opposition to accept 150 million."

Senator Richard Russell, the leading Senate spokesman for the military-industrial bloc, argued in support of the Sentinel ABM system: "If only one man and one woman are to be left on earth, it was his deep desire that they be Americans." (Why not one American and one Russian? Or two peaceful Eskimos? Or a male Eskimo in Greenland and a female New Zealander in radio communication?)

So how do you control the military?

Elect a president in 1972 on this issue. Organize now. And organize everywhere. Liberals in Congress must get on the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees. Seek to eliminate from the military budget those things which "contribute to the arms race or are irrelevant to the present balance of terror."

Negotiate with the Soviet Union on arms control and reduction and reduce the role of the military in the negotiations. Begin with the assumption that the Russians will bargain in good faith. Mobilize independent scientific judgment to influence public opinion and office holders.

Widen the area of organized activity to embrace conservatives, always fearful of concentrations of power, and today increasingly critical of the disastrous judgment shown by military politicians.

"The present military generation is intimately associated with the Vietnam misfortune. And its credibility has been deeply damaged by its fatal association with the bureaucratic truths of that war — with the long succession of defeats that became victories, the victories that became defeats, and brilliant actions that did not signify anything at all.

"In the 50s it required courage for a civilian to challenge Eisenhower on military matters. Anyone is allowed to doubt the omniscience of General Westmoreland."

But above all: Organize and prepare for 1972.

Group Newspaper Ownership Not Necessarily a Threat

The forces making for commercialization and group domination of the press are now particularly strong in North America.

That they can sometimes be thwarted or even hammered to fit non-commercial ends has, however, been admirably demonstrated across the border in Canada.

Although most Canadian small town dailies are as flat and tasteless as the 26 in the Thomson chain — or as their cousins across the border — an important group of the more important quality newspapers have come together to strengthen their editorial independence, not to lose it.

(Second of two)

This movement may be said to have taken its first important turn in 1959 when the influential Ottawa Journal, Conservative in its political policies, was sold to Mr. Victor Sifton, publisher of the Liberal Winnipeg Free Press and his associates — a transaction which on the face of it seemed at first to carry ominous implications for the future of independent journalism in Canada.

It was, however, a sale very different from the usual run of commercial transactions. So far from involving a threat to the Journal's identity the paper's complete editorial independence under its Associate Editors, M. Grattan O'Leary and I. Norman Smith, president and vice-president of the Journal company, was written into the contract.

There was a further contractual undertaking that when Mr. O'Leary came to retire the exclusive control and direction of the Journal's editorial policies would pass to Norman Smith as editor-in-chief so that the paper's position as an independent Conservative newspaper . . . should be preserved for the foreseeable future.

Long Tradition

Writing to me at the time about this link between the Conservative Ottawa Journal and the most famous Liberal newspaper in Canada — but one with a long tradition of editorial freedom from proprietorial control — Norman Smith assured me that the sole purpose of the transaction, an economic precaution rather than an economic necessity, had been to bring behind the Journal larger resources than it could command on its own and thus prevent any possible lowering of standards by reason of mounting costs and increasingly severe competition from new communication media.

He was, he said, completely satisfied that editorial control by O'Leary and himself would remain firm, they would not have gone in under any other conditions.

Group ownership on this model has proved not a threat to journalistic and political independence, but a strong buttress of both.

With the title F.P. Publications the group itself has extended considerably since 1959, its last recruit, early in 1968, being the Toronto Globe and Mail, the nearest thing to a national daily paper in Canada with an influence extending far beyond its immediate circulation area.

F. P. Publications is now in terms of circulation much the largest group in Canadian journalism . . .

It links in one powerful commercial organization the most famous and influential quality daily newspapers in Canada from the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Ottawa Journal in the east to the Winnipeg Free Press and the Albertan of Calgary in the central wheat and prairie lands and the Vancouver Sun and the Victoria Times and Colonist in the far west.

Own Political Voice

But although linked commercially and supported by common resources each retains its separate identity and editorial independence and speaks with its own political voice.

In spite of the mediocrity of much of its small town press Canada has thus presented to its greater neighbor one excellent example of how to turn the tables on the chain store monopolies by using their methods for genuine journalistic purposes.

The history of the press like that of all human activities is a chequered one. It has frequently fallen well behind the aspirations of the most intelligent of its members.

But despite the periodic misuse of its investigatory functions and publicity powers for purposes of mere sensation or the inflation of the personal egotism of individuals, the major compulsions behind its development have almost always been, the urge to satisfy the public right to know and to provide a platform for public anxieties and aspirations which might otherwise have been denied a means of expression.

In all ages and in all countries newspapers, of course, have had to match their publics. Yet the remarkable similarity in pattern of newspaper development suggests that the needs to which they respond are timeless and universal.

Basic Similarities

The differences in character between individual newspapers is substantial, between those serving a 'quality' readership and those serving a 'popular' one, often startlingly so.

Yet their basic similarities are so much more profound than their differences that there is nothing illogical in talking of them as part of one institution.

Yet if they are united as regards their basic purposes, it is also the case that this generic quality makes them very capable of injuring each other. The excesses of the worst reflect upon the best.

It was not simply the reputation of a few individual British newspapers that was tarnished during the absurd frolics of the 1930s or the contemptible excesses of the 1950s and early 1960s but that of the 'press' as a whole.

Death Scramble

And American newspapers still carry in many foreign eyes not merely the insignia of irresponsible sensationalism won in some of the worst of recent trials by newspaper like the Dr. Sam Sheppard case, or in their irresponsible scramble that followed President Kennedy's assassination and Oswald's arrest, but even those pinned on them long ago by Randolph Hearst.

What conception the press of Western countries has of its duties is important not only because of its own role in the increasingly complicated — and increasingly secretive — operations of government in Western societies themselves but also because the course taken by the Western press will have a profound effect on that of the newly developing countries of Asia and Africa.

Like democracy, independent private ownership of the press has, of course, its imperfections. All one can say of both is that in the long run they have shown themselves more likely to serve the public interest than any alternatives.

But neither can one any longer assume that it will be taken for granted. Both respond to fundamental human needs and for this reason tend to be paid lip service even when they are ignored in practice. But both are still on trial and the verdict will be determined by the evidence.

Personal Power

So far as freedom of the press is concerned not all the efforts of the International Press Institute, Unesco, the International Federation of Journalists and many American universities and private bodies, like the Thomson Foundation, to improve the technical and professional equipment of journalism in developing countries — excellent and admirable although these efforts are — will do the trick if the end product of press freedom in the highly developed countries themselves seems to be no more than the personal power of a few individuals or large profits of business organizations with not a thought in their heads beyond their balance sheets.

Liberal Double-Standard

ARIZONA REPUBLIC
An Editorial

Our position on the matter is clear: We oppose the justice department decision to refuse to admit to the United States for a week-long lecture tour Dr. Ernest Mandel, the Belgian "revolutionary Marxist" who edits the militantly leftist weekly La Gauche.

We do not oppose the justice department decision merely because Mandel twice before visited the United States, in 1962 and 1966, under special visas authorized by the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. We oppose it because there is something short-sighted about a nation which feels it must insulate its citizens against any views.

That myopia is compounded when these views, as in the case of revolutionary Marxism, are available in every bookstore and public library in the land, and when they are taught (and many times propounded) in American universities.

But we also oppose the double standard the liberal publications are displaying toward Marxist Mandel and those with views they regard as "rightist."

For example, the New York Times considered the Mandel story important enough to give it three columns on its front page. Time and Newsweek chimed in with accounts of the justice department refusal (under the 1952 McCarran-Walter Act).

Indeed, the Times said: "Liberal academic figures in the United States have warned that the Mandel case raises the question of whether a person should be excluded from the United States because of his political views."

But neither "liberal academic figures," nor the Times nor Time nor Newsweek raised the question when the Johnson administration refused to allow Ian Smith, prime minister of Rhodesia, to visit the United States to undertake a similar lecture tour.

As a matter of fact, not a single line in any liberal publication, so far as we know, criticised the state department decision.

Nor did a single prominent liberal publication or spokesman criticize the state department when, during the United Nations invasion of Katanga, Foggy Bottom expelled from this country Michel Stuelens, Katanga's information officer who, from his tiny New York office, was working around the clock to counter the massive propaganda being disseminated by the UN and the United States government.

Liberals will defend to the death the right of any leftwing speaker to be heard. But they can be depended upon to turn a deaf ear to demands that those they regard as "rightists" also be allowed to be heard.

Happy Where the Action Isn't

By ART STOTT

"Those stories I had been reading about continental drift had begun to make me nervous," the lady said. "When you're used to thinking of dry land as terra firma, and the firma the better, it's disconcerting to be told that the whole earth is shifting around under you, like an unanchored scatter rug on a polished floor. It's worse still when you get the impression that this shifting, with weight moving here and there under the oceans, encourages earthquakes—and us not far enough away from the Juan de Fuca ridge from which movement spreads. The whole thing creates an impression of impermanence. I can do without earthquakes.

Stott

"After listening to Atholl Sutherland Brown, though," she continued, "I feel a little reassured. This is another of those times when I'm glad I'm not where the action is. Mind you, I never thought that if I tried a high jump the ground would have drifted away before I landed. It isn't that fast. Still, as he described the shift of the plate of solids away from the volcanic action of the ocean ridges toward the ditches around the continents, wedging them up a little and pushing them away, it was a little scary. And when he showed the diagram of earthquake-prone areas, I was glad we didn't live in California, particularly when he said that state can expect a major earthquake in the next 20 years, unless they can drain off the pressure.

"Ever since I was a little girl and knew about the quake and fire in San Francisco, things like that have bothered me. When the youngsters were small at Shawnigan and the tremor that dislodged Angel Rock at Cameron Lake heaved us around a bit, I figured we could be hit harder at some time and I didn't like it.

"When you feel that way, it's comforting to know that something has happened to cool things down in this vicinity. As I understood the gentleman who talked to us the other night, the ridges that start the whole thing, also shift a little and the one closest to us has moved further away. So now there isn't any appreciable action underwater pushing against Vancouver Island and the risks of the earth crinkling up hereabouts have been reduced. I'm happy about it.

"Of course things could change. But if we're relatively safe from quakes, that sort of spoils your argument against a tunnel connecting the Island to mainland B.C, doesn't it? You had it all figured that once the thing was bored and traffic moving through it, any day a tremor could shake things apart and you didn't think you could swim under water long enough to get out. Not that I want a tunnel—not with my claustrophobia.

"Still, it seems to be physically feasible now, even if the economics of the thing put it beyond practical consideration, though economics don't always count. Mr. Bennett proved that with his two-river policy and we're going to be paying high electricity rates as long as I live.

"While Dr. Sutherland Brown was talking, advising us to modify our concepts of stability and permanence, I was thinking of little Charlie's theory of the shore rocks off the foot of the lot. We found it quaint when he, a four-year-old then with no understanding of tides, thought the rocks were floating out when the tide came in because there was more water between them and the shore. We knew the rocks were anchored down, that they were in the same place all the time. We hadn't stopped to relate their position to continental drift. Now scientists tell us the whole shebang is drifting over the surface of harder rock.

"Little Charlie was wrong, but perhaps not as wrong as we thought."

Then the lady made a request. "It's important," she said, "to know more about the world in which we live, though this continental shift business causes me a little mental vertigo. You know how I am in a boat. But if you have a chance to book a lecture on tidal waves, don't. Let me coast along on the drift thing a little longer. Since it's not happening right here right now, I'll get accustomed to the idea."

ENCHILADAS

Cook 1 lb. lean ground beef in frying pan over medium heat until brown, stirring frequently to prevent burning and to break into small pieces. Add ½ tsp. salt, ½ lb. cheddar cheese, grated (reserve 1 cup), 1 can chopped olives (4½ ozs.), 1 cup chopped onions to beef and mix. Dip 1 dozen tortillas in sauce (recipe below), lay on plate and put heaping tbls. of meat mixture in the centre. Fold over each side to cover meat mixture. Lay folded side down in oblong baking dish, placing close together to keep from unrolling. Pour one cup of the sauce over the enchiladas and place in moderate oven (350° F) for 15 minutes, or until heated through. Before removing from the oven, sprinkle with the grated cheese which has been reserved. As soon as the cheese melts, serve with the remainder of the sauce which has been heated to the boiling point.

Sauce — 2 cans (8 ozs.) tomato sauce, 1 can (6 ozs.) tomato paste, 1 can (10 ozs.) tomato soup, ½ tsp. salt, 2 cups water, ½ cup cooking oil, 2 tbls. chili powder, 1 tsp. garlic powder. Mix all ingredients. Bring to boil, simmer gently, stirring occasionally.

Ottawa Research Centre Top Priority

By KEN CLARK

OTTAWA (CP) — The government promised Monday to sink $30,000,000 or more into its high-priority research centre for underdeveloped countries in the next five years.

Dealing in the Commons with the bill to establish the Ottawa-based international development research centre, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said the $30,000,000 is a minimum.

He foresaw eventually "the allocation of five per cent of our total development aid funds to the centre," but gave no timetable for reaching the objective.

At current annual aid amounts ($338,000,000), five per cent would put almost $17,000,000 a year into the centre, expected to open in a few months. As the Canadian foreign aid budget advances to $500,000,000 — as expected — the five-per-cent formula would give the centre $25,000,000 a year if applied.

If the government sticks to the minimum over the next five years, the annual allotment would be $6,000,000 on an average. Mr. Sharp said one-third of the minimum allotment would go into headquarters operations, the remainder into research projects that are to produce scientific and technological developments for the benefit of underdeveloped countries.

GETS SPEEDY READING

The bill to establish the agency was given speedy second reading with opposition parties in favor of the agency which Mr. Sharp said is essential to help close the gap between rich, industrialized countries and poor, underdeveloped countries.

He said the gap is largely a "scientific and technological" thing originating with the industrial revolution in the 19th century. The industrialized nations built up a research and development practice that promoted their own growth, but not that of less developed countries.

"The relative position of the less-developed nations can only worsen if the balance in the deployment of the world's scientific and technological resources remains so heavily biased against them," he said.

Outside the House, Maurice Strong, director of the federal foreign aid arm, the Canadian international development agency, said the centre will attract to its governing board and staff "some of the great minds of our times."

HEAVEN FOR CREATIVE

He could divulge no names yet, but he hoped the centre "will be the natural home of the creative eccentric."

Either he, or Mr. Sharp or both, also made these points about the centre:

—The chairman and most of the centre's governing board will be Canadian, but some members and some staff will be foreigners including people from less developed countries.

—The centre will operate on a decentralized basis under the guidance of a small headquarters staff which will identify problems and develop programs to solve them.

—Research programs would be farmed out to institutions and individuals with Canadians playing an important role.

—There may be five or six such programs in the first few years with participation by institutions from underdeveloped countries in all cases.

—Although a Canadian-dominated centre at the outset, it could some day become more international in scope and operation.

—Centre headquarters would likely become a central clearing house for the world for technical data relevant to international development.

RENEW RESTRAINT PLEA

Also in the House, Prime Minister Trudeau kept up his anti-inflation campaign with an appeal to industry and labor for restraint in their demands on the economy. He disclosed that several members of his cabinet have been using their influence to foster restraint.

With the Nigerian civil war coming to a close, Mr. Sharp revealed Canadian government transport planes are standing by to airlift supplies if needed into defeated breakaway Biafra to halt starvation.

Later, in an emergency Biafra debate he said the airlift could not proceed without the co-operation of the civil war victors, the Nigerian federal government. However, he was sure that the co-operation would be forthcoming.

The Commons turns today to a proposed Canada corporations act that will require all federally incorporated companies, including private firms, with assets or annual income exceeding $3,000,000 to disclose their financial situation in annual statements that would be available to the public.

FILM BOARD MAKES PITCH TO EDUCATORS

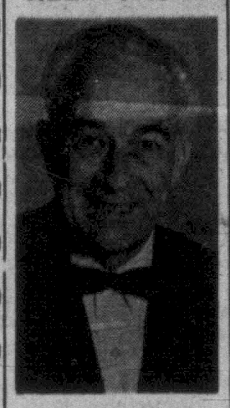

The National Film Board intends to hold three open houses for educators at its office, 811 Wharf, to show some of the 1,000 films that are available for use in schools.

The previews will be held from 5 to 10 p.m. on Jan. 14, 21 and 28 and are a result of a new policy set Jan. 1 which allows schools full access to the films.

The films range from two-minute experimentals to 1½-hour features.

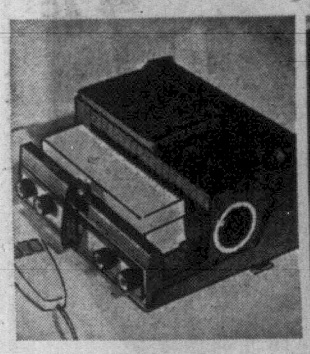

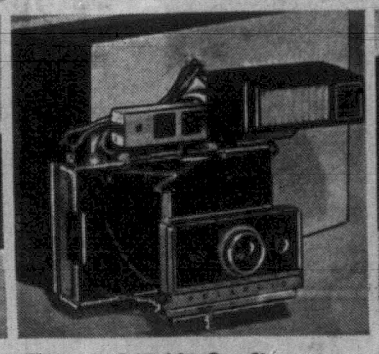

Local representative Peter Grant says the films include many guidance features on teen-age pregnancies, sex and other subjects, a variety based on social studies, "and masses of Canadiana."

Limits Approved

VANCOUVER (CP) — The board of governors of the University of B.C. has approved a recommendation which will limit the 1970 freshman enrolment to 3,400 students. The new ruling will reduce the number of first-year students entering UBC for the first time by about 300.

THIEVES GIVE GOOD SERVICE

GRIMSBY, England (UPI) — Thieves stole several thousand dollars from a local bank night deposit safe and then attached a wooden box for late depositers with a sign advising them:

"The night safe is temporarily out of order. Customers are invited to use the temporary box provided."

Museum Lectures Set

A series of illustrated lectures will be held at the Newcombe Auditorium in the Provincial Museum beginning Friday Feb. 6 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Sydney W. Jackman of the University of Victoria will give the first talk on the historian and the history of British Columbia.

Other lectures in the series will be: Feb. 13, The Art of Willie Seaweed, a Kwakiutl Master; Feb. 27, recent geological events on the Victoria-Saanich peninsula; March 13, early prehistoric population movements into the Pacific Northwest; March 20, A Visit to the Home of Bakbakwalanooksiwae, The Cannibal-at-the-North-End-of-the-World; and March 27, Songs of the Caribou Argonauts.

PROJECT NO. 2063

PATRICIA BAY HIGHWAY

RECONSTRUCTION: ROGERS AVENUE TO CHERRY TREE BEND SECTION

STA. 99+78.61 TO STA. 255+70.00 (2.95 Miles)

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sealed tenders, marked "Tender for Project No. 2063: Patricia Bay Highway: Reconstruction: Rogers Avenue to Cherry Tree Bend Section," will be received by the Minister of Highways in his office at the Parliament Buildings, Victoria, British Columbia, up to 2:00 p.m. (Pacific Standard Time) on Tuesday the 3rd day of February, 1970, and opened in public at that time and date.

Plans, specifications, and conditions of tender may be obtained from the Provincial Government Plan Viewing Room, 1414-207 West Hastings Street, Vancouver 3, British Columbia (Telephone 684-8918), or from the undersigned for the sum of ten dollars ($10) (cheque or money-order made payable to the Minister of Finance) which is not refundable.

Construction of this contract shall conform to the requirements of the applicable sections of the Department of Highways "General Specifications for Highway Construction". If the bidder does not already have a copy of these specifications, one may be obtained from the Provincial Government Plan Viewing Room, Vancouver 3, British Columbia, or from the undersigned for the sum of ten dollars ($10) (cheque or money order made payable to the Minister of Finance) which is not refundable. All copies purchased are registered and amendments are forwarded when issued.

No tender will be accepted or considered which contains an escalator clause or any other qualifying conditions and the lowest or any tender will not necessarily be accepted.

H. T. MIARD,
Deputy Minister.

Department of Highways,
Parliament Buildings,
Victoria, British Columbia.

Kamad Silver

Kamad Silver Co. Ltd. proposes a $450,000 building program for its base-metals Homestake property north-east of Kamloops.

President Fred N. Shukin said construction will start immediately on a shop building to be followed by erection of three separate structures, to house crusher, offices and pilot mill.

He said metallurgical testing is expected to be finished by the end of February and a mill is programmed for completion in May. The mill will have a daily capacity of 100-150 tons and will be expandable.

Honeywell-McQueen

Honeywell, Inc., has acquired one of Canada's leading photographic equipment distributors for more than $1 million.

Stephen F. Keating, president of Honeywell, said the acquisition of McQueen Sales Co. Ltd., of Toronto and Vancouver would make McQueen responsible "for both sales and service of Honeywell photo products in Canada."

Bombardier Ltd.

Bombardier Ltd., has acquired 100 per cent of the shares of Jarry Precision Ltd. of Laval, and its subsidiary Monarch Punch and Die Engineering Co. Ltd. of Montreal. Value of the transaction was not disclosed.

The acquisition will immediately supply Bombardier's needs for precision parts for 1970-71 smowmobile production which is scheduled for an early start with a substantial increase over last year.

Shell Canada

Shell Canada Ltd. will test an experimental process at its Waterton, Alta., Gas plant that could reduce emission of sulphur dioxide.

The company said the process would be most bedeficial in gas plants with large sulphur manufacturing facilities associated.

Testing is to begin in March on the process developed by The Ralph M. Parsons Construction Co. Ltd.

GEORGE DONALD ALDER, formerly of Apt. A, 3860 Stocker Street, Los Angeles, California, U.S.A., deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that creditors and others having claims against the estate of the above deceased are hereby required to send them to the undersigned Agent for the Executrix at P.O. Box 580, Victoria, B.C., before the 9th day of February, A.D. 1970, after which date the Agent for the Executrix will distribute the said estate among the parties entitled thereto having regard only to the claims of which it then has notice.

The Royal Trust Company,
Agent for the Executrix.
By Cox, Taylor, Pollard & Company, its Solicitors.

Oil Export Limit Set In Report

WASHINGTON (CP) — President Nixon's cabinet-level committee studying oil policy has tentatively agreed on a first-phase limit of about 600,000 barrels a day for Canada, it has been learned.

The same source who confirmed this figure—which had been given by other inside sources close to the committee—also noted that several members have reserved the right to make last-minute changes in the report. It is expected to reach the president's desk in the next few weeks.

And the fact that two members—Interior Secretary Walter Hickel and Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans—are opposed to certain vital provisions would seem to make it easier for Nixon to reject all or part of the program.

It may be that Nixon, as he has with similar "task force" reports recently will not release it for some time after he receives it.

In the view of most observers, the 600,000 quota would be a disappointment to Canada since the rate for this year already is 597,425 barrels—an increase of 100,425 over the quota set for 1969. Also, imports from Canada traditionally run over the quotas set at the first of each year by the interior department.

The latest figures available, for instance, show that imports from Canada were 623,530 barrels daily during October, 1969.

Depreciation Clause Has Group Puzzled

A Victoria Chamber of Commerce committee studying the White Paper taxation proposals has encountered conflict of opinion on depreciation allowance.

A brief being compiled by a lawyer, three chartered accountants and an investment dealer was reviewed Monday by the chamber executive and referred back to the committee for further consideration before a directors' meeting Jan. 23.

Lawyer George F. Jones said the committee held opposite views on the proposed elimination of existing capital cost allowances for rental properties, and that executive members also argued on both sides of the question.

He said there was feeling among the members that what Finance Minister Benson proposes for taxation reform is over-all a great social document.

However, the committee and executive fear that if the White Paper becomes the basis for legislation the way it is, it will destroy initiative from which many great businesses in Canada have grown.

The brief suggested a form of capital gains tax is acceptable, but to lump gains into ordinary taxable income isn't.

It was felt the proposed elimination of convention and business entertainment expenses would be expecially hard on a city like Victoria, where efforts are being made to develop a substantial convention industry. The brief said unreasonable expenses for entertainment and convention purposes are already covered by a section of the Income Tax Act.

A further area of concern to the committee is the taxation of small business, which under the White Paper would lose part of the exemption on initial income.

The committee suggests a graduated scale of taxation for businesses, depending on their relative size.

Another meeting with the chamber executive will be held before the brief is put in its final form.

Chartered accountants David Moore, Walter Creed and Dennis Roberts, and investment manager John Reed are the other committee members.

Incentive Essential, Mines Body Informed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A mineral marketing expert said Tuesday night that the favorable tax environment "would be virtually eliminated" if proposals in the federal government's white paper on taxation became law.

The suggestion was made by Harold T. Fargey, Montreal, vice-president marketing of Cominco Ltd., in an address to the annual meeting of the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Mines.

He said tax incentives have encouraged the flow of capital into the mineral industry and other countries, such as Ireland, Austrialia and the United States consider such incentives essential.

"It is vital that the government be persuaded to reconsider its proposals so that the vigor of our mineral industry and its tremendous contribution to the economy will not be impaired," said Fargey.

"While the assets of the western mineral industry are second to none, the stimulus of a proper tax climate is, at present, under a dark cloud."

Chrysler Names New President

NEW YORK (AP) — Chrysler Corp. has made two major changes in its top management, shifting President Virgil E. Boyd to the new job of vice-chairman of the board and elevating Vice-President John J. Riccardo to the president's job.

Boyd had been president of Chrysler since 1967 and Riccardo served as group vice-president U.S. and Canadian automotive operations since that same year.

Bill WALKER

So now it is Bobby Orr who may be the best to ever play hockey. Strong words, but this is a big, strong, young man with an already superior record of accomplishment. And that degree of excellence should improve. For he is as yet only a mere babe in the woods in the world's fastest sport. He is all of 21 years of age.

It all came to the fore, if it hadn't been recognized earlier, in last Saturday's game telecast from Maple Leaf Gardens.

Orr was the complete standout in a well-played game which also saw the Maple Leafs at their best this season.

He was just a tremendous figure. His skating was superb, his rink-length rushes were a joy to behold; his balance and dexterity were a figure skater's delight, and he came out of the game which Toronto won, 4-3, with three points on a goal and two assists.

No coach, or fan, could ask for anything more, or get more.

It may be said in dissent that Orr could be suspect defensively in the loss because he did cause two Toronto goals by deflecting the puck past his own goaltender.

But this is a false premise upon which to base an argument. For as every true hockey fan knows, this is what is termed the run of the puck; or to the golfer, the rub of the green, or to the footballer, the bounce of the ball. Call it what you will, it can happen, anytime, to anyone.

And on that subject, too, it is doubtful if the statistics which show who was on the ice when what goal is scored will ever be a true indication of a player's real ability. Like the lamppost to the drunk, statistics are more to lean on, than revealing.

But even on that score, Orr's record can stand to be searched, and will not be found wanting.

And so, right now, as the NHL teams enter the second half of their 76-game season, Orr is the leading pointmaker with 12 goals and 49 assists for 61 points.

He is out in front of the scoring race by a handy 12 points, and if he continues his present pace he will finish the season with 120 points.

If accomplished, this will be a hallmark in itself, for no other player, but one, has ever done that. And that was his teammage Phil Esposito, who last year set an all-time record of 126 points. As a matter of record, only two other players, besides Esposito, have ever scored more than 100 points in one season. That honor fell to Chicago's Bobby Hull, already an established super-star, with 107 points last year, and to another veteran of unquestioned ability, Gordie Howe. He had 103 points.

Distinguished company. It most certainly is, and with a wide array of data to show they are much superior to most in their profession. But then they are forwards, and established stars of the super-production class. They came of age many years ago, and it is their prime function to score goals, and accumulate points, which they do.

And Orr belongs. More so because he is a defenceman, and defencemen are not generally charged with such responsibilities.

There are many who will contend, and rightly so, that there is no more exciting sight in hockey than to see a defenceman "winding up" behind his own net, and then rushing goalward, leaving his opponents strewn in his wake.

And here again, this is Bobby Orr, defenceman, a small part of him. He is out of that school of rushers, but with a difference. He doesn't need to "wind up." His speed is almost instant. In two or three strides, at most, he is in full flight. And if one particular rush does not wholly succeed, what does succeed is that the opposition is continually put off balance by his adroit movements.

Certainly he gets trapped at times, but his powers of recovery are so great that it takes talent of comparable quality to take advantage of what some detractors may call his only failing. And he will likely grow out of it as he fashions a growing page in hockey history. He has time at his disposal.

But can he still lead the NHL in scoring when the regular season is all over in March? Perhaps, and then it may be that the intangible law of percentages will catch up with him. It is not in the hockey books that defencemen score more points than forwards.

But then it wasn't in the same books that anyone would score 100 points a season, until last year; and it wasn't recorded for posterity that Pierre Pilote's total of 59 points in 1964-65 would so soon be erased as a standard for all defencemen, was it?

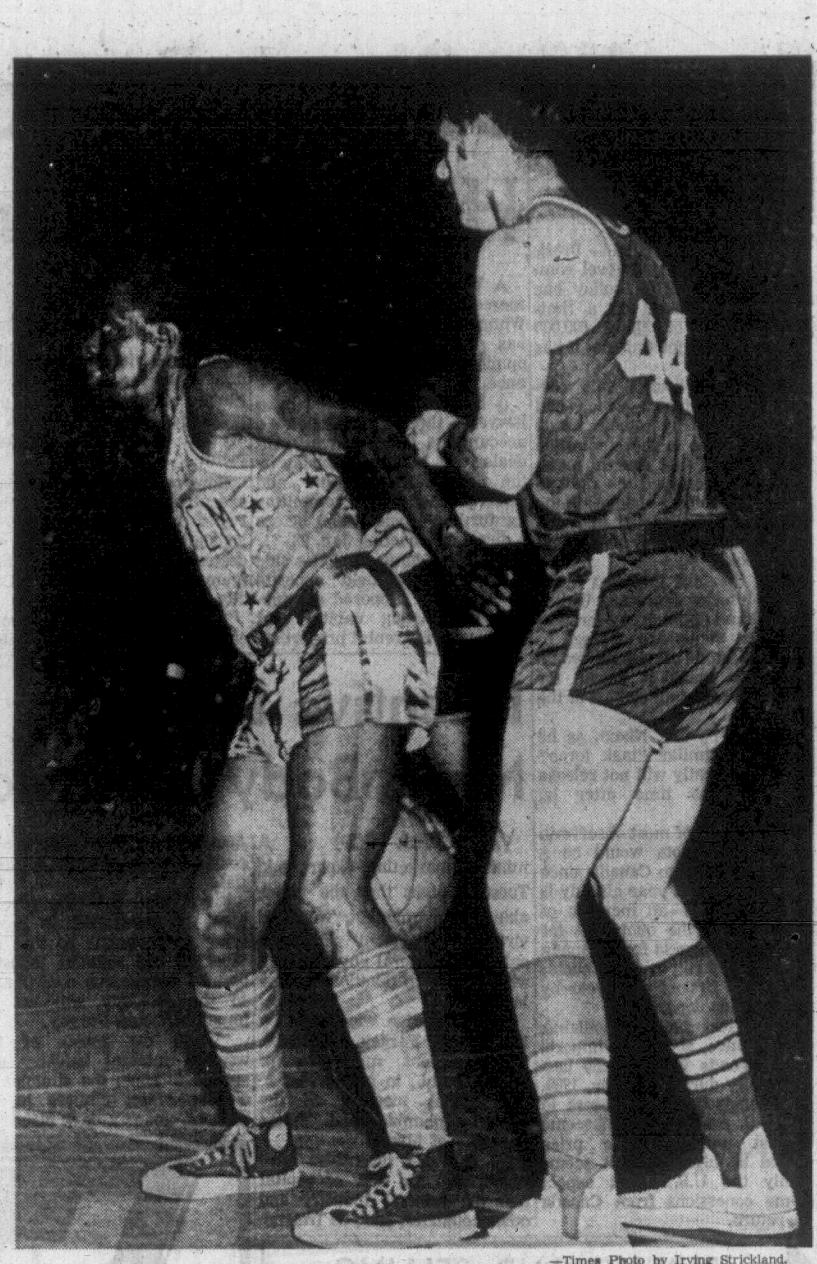

Orr made certain of the latter in the 1968-69 season when he finished with 21 goals and 43 assists for 64 points. That 21-goal total also was a new high for defencemen. Flash Hollett held the previous record of 20.

But even suppose Orr doesn't make it all the way to the scoring title. A horrible thought. He still should wipe out Pat Stapleton's mark of 50 assists. He most likely will surpass his own goal record of 21. And with any luck at all he should get over the 100-point total this season.

That, in this humble servant's opinion is the ultimate he can hope for, even with all his rare skills.

Which isn't bad for a young man of 21 years, who has been a pro for only four seasons.

He was too young to have started earlier.

TROTTER TRICKERY

Leader in laugh-provoking routines of Harlem Globetrotters, veteran Bob "Showboat" Hall swings ball behind knees during basketball show at the Memorial Arena Tuesday night. Apparently confused by it all is six-eight centre Bob Smith of New York Nationals, who dropped 115-108 decision to Trotters before more than 3,000 fans. Pablo Robertson potted 29 points for winners and Dean Donellon scored 27 for Nationals.

Hall, Hull Remembered For NHL All-Star Game

MONTREAL (CP)—Glenn Hall and Bobby Hull, two National Hockey League stars who have seen little action this year, have been picked to play in the league's 23rd annual all-star game in St. Louis next Tuesday.

Scotty Bowman, coach of St. Louis Blues and the West Division all-stars, asked special permission, especially since the game is in St. Louis, to name goalie Hall of the Blues as an added starter, allowing the veteran netminder to play in his 12th all-star game.

Hall has played in only 10 games this season.

Hull has 12 goals and 10 assists.

The two coaches Monday announced their choice of players to supplement the 12 from each division selected earlier by members of the National Hockey League Writers' Association in the respective divisions.

BOWMAN NAMES 8

Bowman named eight players: goaltender Hall; defenceman Bill White of Los Angeles Kings and Harry Howell of Oakland Seals; centre Danny O'Shea of Minnesota North Stars; left wingers Jean-Paul Parise of Minnesota and Dean Prentice of Pittsburgh Penguins; and right wingers Jim Roberts of St. Louis and Claude Larose of Minnesota.

The 12 players already selected for the East team are: Goaltenders Ed Giacomin of New York and Tony Esposito of Chicago; defencemen Bobby Orr of Boston Bruins, Jacques Laperriere of Montreal and Jim Neilson and Brad Park, both of New York; centres Phil Esposito of Boston and Walt Tkaczuk of New York; right wingers Gordie Howe of Detroit and John McKenzie of Boston; and left wingers John Bucyk of Boston and Jacques Lemaire of Montreal.

The 12 players chosen for the West are: Goaltenders Jacques Plante of St. Louis and Bernie Parent of Philadelphia Flyers; defencemen Al Arbour and Barclay Plager of St. Louis, Carol Vadnais of Oakland and Bob Woytowich of Pittsburgh; centres Phil Goyette and Red Berenson of St. Louis; right wingers Bill Goldsworthy of Minnesota and Frank St. Marseille of St. Louis; and left wingers Ab McDonald of St. Louis and Danny Grant of Minnesota.

Rocky Lost 50 Pounds Training for Computer

BOSTON (AP) — Cassius Clay agrees with those who say boxing needs a strong tonic to cure its problems—and he says he knows just the right medicine.

"The real champ must return or the game will die," the defrocked heavyweight titleholder said at a news conference Tuesday.

"Sure boxing needs reviving," he said in answer to that question. "There's no more poetry, no more shuffling, no more predicting rounds, they can't talk and they're ugly."

But wouldn't it be tough for him to come back after his three years of enforced absence from the ring due to his difficulties with the draft?

"If I fought Joe Frazier tonight I know I could beat him, even though I haven't fought for three years," he said. "I could beat him just on speed and natural ability."

Clay was in town to promote his computerized "fight" with Rocky Marciano.

"You'll see two real champions — history's greatest — not two homemade champions," he said of the film. "This is the controversial showdown of the battle of champions, the greatest in history."

PLENTY OF ACTION

Clay told the news conference there will be plenty of action—much of it real—in the film.

"We did everything that could happen in a real fight—everything," he said. "One round he'd be coming at me, another I'd be coming at him. Sometimes he would pin me against the ropes and in the corners, other times we fought at long range with me jabbing and hooking."

Clay explained that Marciano, who died in a plane crash last year, "lost 50 pounds and trained for four months" to get ready for the filming of the computerized fight.

He said they boxed 75 one-minute rounds, since it was too much to ask a man of Rocky's age to fight three-minute rounds.

Cassius also had an answer to the obvious question of what the computer's decision was on how the fight would come out.

"Pay $5 next Tuesday night and find out."

Showing of the film of the computerized fight between Rocky Marciano and Cassius Clay is scheduled for Victoria's Odeon Theatre on Jan. 20 at 7:30 p.m.

MEDICOR COMMENT . . .

'Not That Interested'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tom Scallen, president of Minneapolis-based Medicor which controls the Vancouver franchise that will enter the National Hockey League next season said Tuesday he is not really that interested in buying a Canadian Football League club.

In a telephone interview from New York, Scallen said: "I really have no serious thoughts along those lines."

"Somebody asked me if I was interested in getting into Canadian football and I said 'sure' but I'm not actively pursuing a franchise."

Medicore, a medical equipment supply company, also owns the Ice Follies in addition to majority control of the Canucks, now playing their last season in the Western Hockey League.

Scallen indicated the NHL Canucks will operate two farm teams—one in Rochester of the American Hockey League and another "in one of the plains cities" of Canada in the WHL—for at least two years.

After that period, he said the club would likely reassess the farm set-up with a view to cutting down to one club. The Canucks own the Rochester AHL franchise.

Burns Passes Test, Named Blues' Pilot

By The Canadian Press

Charlie Burns' optimism has been rewarded and the 33-year-old National Hockey League veteran now can resume his duties behind the Minnesota North Stars' bench knowing his job is as secure as any coach's job can be.

North Stars general manager Wren Blair picked Burns from Pittsburgh Penguins in last summer's intra-league draft and last month installed the veteran centre as assistant coach.

Their association is one of long standing since Burns starred for Whitby, Ont., Dunlops when Blair managed and coached them to the 1958 world championship—the last such championship won by Canada.

When the North Stars play host to St. Louis Blues tonight, Burns will be full-time coach. Blair announced the promotion Tuesday.

In the only game Tuesday night, Philadelphia Flyers beat Oakland Seals 3-1.

WORK LOAD REDUCED

Blair had been handling both the manager's and coach's duties at Minnesota until his doctor advised him to cut down on the work load. The result was Burns' installation as interim coach Dec. 30.

But when the North Stars visited Toronto last week, Burns told an interviewer he believed the job was his on a permanent basis.

"I know all this stuff about three weeks and everything, and the idea of us having a meeting at the end of this month to decide if I'll continue," he said. "But the way I look at it, the job's mine.

"This idea of three weeks and a meeting is a figure of speech, that's all. It's a way of leaving the door open so that if things don't work out, there won't be any embarassment."

IMPROVED LEAD

Since Burns took over as coach last month, the team has lost two games and tied three. One of the losses was to Philadelphia, which last weekend took over second place in the West Division from Minnesota.

The Flyers improved their lead over the North Stars to three points with the Tuesday victory while remaining 11 points behind the division-leading Blues.

Simon Nolet's eighth season goal at 4:56 of the third period broke a 1-1 tie and less than 10 minutes later the right winger got his ninth goal to put the game out of the Seals' reach.

Rookie Bob Clarke, who set up Nolet's winning goal, also assisted on a second-period score by Jean-Guy Gendron.

Oakland's Norm Ferguson scored early in the third period before a crowd of 2,923 in the West Coast city. It was the Seals' 25th loss in 40 games and left them still in fifth place in the West Division, four points behind Pittsburgh.

Seattle Boat Wins

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — The Sydney yacht Moonraker Two scored her third victory in the world Thunderbird class championships Tuesday to take a 14-point lead. The other heat was won by Victor Smith of Seattle.

DICK DUFF BACK IN HOT WATER

MONTREAL (CP) — Dick Duff, Montreal Canadiens' veteran left winger, once again is at odds with the club's management.

Duff, 33, and a National Hockey League regular since he started with Toronto Maple Leafs in 1955, missed the team's regular workout Monday.

When he showed up for the Tuesday practice he was told by coach Claude Ruel he would not be allowed to join in the workout until he had talked to general manager Sam Pollock.

Unfortunately for Duff, Pollock was absent Tuesday because of illness. However, a club spokesman said Duff met the assistant general manager Floyd Curry, and Pollock will issue a statement on his return.

Duff announced his retirement earlier in the season, but he was talked out of the decision by Pollock. After minor surgery he reported to the club Nov. 15.

He last played Dec. 31 against Pittsburgh Penguins, but has not been dressed since that time because he missed a New Year's Day practice.

In all, the Kirkland Lake, Ont., native has appreared in 17 games this season and scored one goal and assisted in one other.

When Duff indicated earlier that he wanted to retire, he cited personal problems as the cause.

Amateur League Will Ask For Pros

MEDICINE HAT, Alta. (CP) — The Alberta Hockey League will ask the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association for a regulation change to allow professional hockey players in senior hockey leagues.

Glen Chapman of Medicine Hat, governor of the AHL, said Tuesday he has requested CAHA vice-president Joe Kryczka to arrange a meeting with the senior representative of the CAHA. He also asked that all senior leagues in Canada attend the meeting.

Under Chapman's proposal, Canadian senior clubs could use a specified number of professionals on each team. Each senior league would set up a board to decide where the professional players would be allocated to equalize the strength of the teams. Salaries of professional players would be paid by the sponsoring professional clubs.

JUNIORS EYED

Chapman said Canadian senior clubs constantly lose graduating junior players to the eastern professional leagues. These players are sent to other professional leagues by National Hockey League clubs who wish to retain them on the protected lists.

Under present CAHA rules, such players are not protected if playing for Canadian senior clubs.

The AHL governor said if CAHA regulations allowed the professional clubs to retain rights to players farmed out to senior amateur clubs, more junior players would remain in amateur ranks.

Huston Leads Point Parade

TRAIL—Cranbrook's Ron Huston last week retained his 13-point lead in the Western International Hockey League scoring race as he boosted his total to 61 points on 23 goals and 38 assists.

Leroy Mowery of Nelson pulled one point ahead of Kimberley's Bill McLelland to take over sole possession of second place.

TO TAKE PLACE . . .

College Tourney Planned

. . . OF WORLD MEET

MONTREAL (CP) — The Gazette says an unofficial North American college hockey championship may be held in Winnipeg in late March to take the place of the cancelled world championship tournament.

The newspaper says two college coaches in the Ottawa area, unidentified, approached officials of Hockey Canada last Thursday with such a proposal and the national team organization expressed interest.

However, the City of Winnipeg and the Manitoba Centennial Commission have shown only lukewarm interest, the paper says.

The Gazette says it was tentatively proposed at a meeting of interested parties in Ottawa that five or six Canadian colleges, three U.S. colleges and possibly the Canadian national team be invited to play.

On the basis of present rankings, the paper says the probable entries would be St. Mary's of Halifax, Loyola of Montreal, Toronto, Waterloo, Manitoba, Alberta, Denver, North Dakott and Cornell.

Cornell coach Ned Harkness had been approached and had expressed interest.

FOR RUGBY TRIAL . . .

. . . AT VANCOUVER

Thirteen players from teams in the Victoria Rugby Union have been selected to participate in a trial match Saturday at Vancouver's Brockton Oval.

Mainland stalwarts will fill out the rosters of the two clubs in the trial, which has been arranged by the B.C. Rugby Union to assist selectors in choosing a provincial representative side that is scheduled to leave March 11 for a tour of Japan.

University of Victoria Vikings earned the largest number of places on the local selection list, with Al Foster, Lee Doney, Dave Leonard, Mike Eckhardt and Ken Wilke invited to Vancouver for the 2 p.m. tussle.

Gudmund Gudmundseth, Ivor Ford, Martin Davis and Hugh Molloy will represent Cowichan while Tom Browne was picked from Castaways.

Although three men were selected from Oak Bay Wanderers, Don Burgess will be the only Oak Bay player in the trial. Unable to participate are Don Panton, currently on a course in Toronto, and John Wenman, who is recovering from appendicitis.

VIKING VIEWS

By Brian Butters

Although most athletic teams at the University of Victoria have been in action for some time, there is one sports group that does not swing into serious competition until quite late in the academic year.

That sport is volleyball. Uvic sponsors both men's and women's competition in volleyball and the two teams compete for honors in the Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

The men are coached this year by Kent Andrews, a teacher at S. J. Willis Junior High School. Andrews inherited the job from the popular Don Smith, who left a lasting mark on Uvic volleyball by coaching the men to the Canadian championship several years ago.

Andrews is working with a fairly experienced crew, led by a contingent of players who formerly toiled with Claremont High School teams.

Ken Lundeen, a good jumper and spiker, in his third year with the team, played on a Claremont team which won the B.C. high school championship. John Barker and six-five Greg Russell won a share of the Vancouver Island championship with Claremont last year and have played well so far this season.

The captain of the team, Nimby Sihota, hails from Lake Cowichan. Standing five-nine, he works primarily as a setter. Al Graves and Rick Baker turn in consistently steady performances; Graves spikes well while Baker has tremendous spring for his size.

All told, the Vikings should fare well in the WCIAA volleyball tournament which is forthcoming in the next few weeks. This weekend they play in a tournament against lower mainland competition.

On the distaff side, Uvic women volleyballers have for a coach a figure who is well known in local sport circles. Derek Reimer played on the Vikings team for four years and was selected to the Canadian team for the Pan-Am Games in 1967.

Reimer, in addition to coaching the girls, is a lecturer in the department of geography at the University and plays fullback for the Uvic Norsemen rugby team.

Reimer's girls are an experienced bunch with a good number of veterans back from past teams. Team captain Linda Beury and five-nine Val Barnes are four-year veterans who, together with Wendy Aaronson, played in the 1967 Quebec Winter Games.

Rookie Alix Williams last year played on a team which won the B.C. senior "B" women's championship. Kathy Newell, Pat Bourne and five-footer Maureen Chan have been solid performers while with the Vikettes.

The girls should do well in the WCIAA competition scheduled for February and with any luck could win it all. They get a chance to prove their worth in an invitational tournament at UBC this weekend.

Some creditable performances were turned in at Calgary last weekend by members of the Uvic track and field crew. Especially notable were the efforts of Penny May, who set a meet record in winning the junior women's shotput and grabbed two second-place finishes in sprints.

The entire Uvic team performed well as the athletes accumulated a total of one first-place, four second-place, and three third-place finishes.

The basketball Vikings continue in their battle for a playoff spot in the WCIAA as they travel to Winnipeg for two weekend games.

Fifth-place University of Winnipeg will be the opposition on Friday and University of Manitoba Bisons will tackle the Vikings on Saturday. Bisons currently hold down second spot in the ten-team loop.

At least a split in the two games will be necessary if Vikings want to hold on to sole possession of fourth place. Two victories would catapult them into a lofty second-place tie.

Uvic's Vikettes, competitors in both the WCIAA and the Inter-City Women's League, currently occupy the runner-up position in both loops. The girls of coach Howie Tooby trail University of Saskatchewan (Saskatoon) in the WCIAA, and Vancouver Molsons in the inter-city league.

Vikettes get a chance to advance up the ladder when they meet Molsons and Mt. Pleasant in Vancouver this weekend.

WCIAA statistics show three Uvic players in the top eight scorers; Rose Witzel in third spot, Barb Tribe in sixth, and last year's champion Heather Witzel eighth after only two games.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Back in contention for second rolloff title in Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest is Bill Burke, winner of tenpin crown in Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs two years ago. Bill qualified for this season's rolloffs as he earned men's tenpin award in 12th week of current contest by rolling 224-183-206—613 series in Wednesday Commercial League at Mayfair Lanes.

Esso Win Streak Ends As Broncos Earn Draw

Victoria Cougars, who lost a small portion of their B.C. Junior Hockey League lead on Tuesday when Vernon Essos tied Broncos 1-1 in Penticton, have a chance tonight to remedy the situation.

The single point broke Essos out of a second-place deadlock with Vancouver Centennials and lifted them within five points of Cougars, who are scheduled to visit Vancouver tonight.

Vernon holds five games in hand over Victoria.

Essos had a winning streak snapped at nine games with the tie but remain undefeated in 10 league encounters this season.

Defenceman Tom Gawryletz scored for Pentiction late in the first period and Gord Osinchuck scored the tying goal for Vernon at 7:40 of the third period.

WINLESS IN SIX

Broncos, now winless in six games, could not make the power play effective against the strong Vernon club and twice failed to score while holding a two-man advantage.

Cougars will possibly be casting a few apprehensive glances over their shoulders because Vernon greets sixth-place Kelowna Buckaroos in the only other BCJHL game tonight.

In addition, Cats play host to Essos this Saturday at 8:30 in Memorial Arena.

Expos Selected

MONTREAL (CP)—Montreal Expos have been selected to represent baseball's National League in 1970 Hall of Fame game in Cooperstown, N.Y. on July 27.

Chicago White Sox will be the American League representative in 28th annual game.

Arsenal Wins Cup Contest

LONDON (CP) — Arsenal defeated Rouen, 1-0, in the European Fairs Soccer Cup third-round, second-leg tie here Tuesday night.

Jon Sammels scored for Arsenal in the 88th minute.

In league play Tuesday, Middlesbrough bested Blackburn, 4-1 in Division II and Rotherham and Stockport played a scoreless draw in Division III.

Deadline for Pilots Only Nine Days Away

SEATTLE (AP) — The American League has given the Seattle Pilots baseball club until Jan. 22 to put its financial affairs in order, Fred Danz, head of the Seattle group trying to buy the club franchise, said Tuesday.

"The committee from the league said our problems could be solved as well in the next nine days as in the next month," Danz said.

American League-president Joe Cronin had said here just one day earlier the deadline was Feb. 15, a date set by the league resolution approved last month which okayed the Danz group's purchase of the club.

Cronin, baseball-commissioner Bowie Kuhn, and two other league officials were in Seattle Monday for talks with Danz and others concerned with the money trouble. The visiting officials left Tuesday after discussions which went into the night-time hours Monday and resumed Tuesday morning.

Bowling traces its ancestry to Roman times, and forms and variations are played around the world. You'll see it played four different ways during the British Columbia Festival of Sports. Bocce ball, bowling's Italian descendant, will be a feature of Creston's Festival. Lawn bowling, the genteel outdoor form, will be played in many centers, while five- and ten-pin bowling will involve over 90,000 British Columbians in 200 centers. Zone finals will take place in 20 cities, provincial championships in Vernon and Kamloops and Canadian and international events in Vancouver.

DICTATORSHIP THREATENED

Paraguay in Church-State War

By LOUIS UCHITELLE

ASUNCION (AP) — Paraguay's Roman Catholic bishops, spurred on by Vatican council teachings, have accused President Alfredo Stroessner's government of systematically violating human rights and trying, with violence, to silence the church.

Bishops in other Latin American countries have opposed governments from time to time, but Paraguay's are the first to be united in opposition, under the new progressive banner of the church.

Stroessner, 57, an army general who seized power in 1954, presides over Latin America's oldest dictatorship. His monolithic control of the country had seemed unthreatened until the Paraguayan Episcopal Conference announced in November the existence of a church-state "confrontation."

Stroessner, in recent public declarations, has attempted to minimize the dispute. He tells Paraguay's 2,600,000 people, most of them Roman Catholics, that he, too, is a "fervent Catholic." Only a few subversive priests, the government says, are to blame for trouble with the church.

But the Episcopal Conference, composed of the nation's 13 bishops, insists that most of the 400 priests support it. Many from the countryside have criticized the government in recent months. If there is opposition within the clergy, as the government contends, it is silent—or it runs the risk of church censure for speaking out.

CLOSED NEWSPAPER

The weekly newspaper Comunidad, published by priests as the unofficial voice of the Episcopal Conference, was closed by the government in late October.

"From now on," said a Comunidad editorial, "the church refuses to 'pacify spirits' at the expense of justice . . . and for the benefit of a privileged minority enjoying the fruits of wealth and power."

The bishops have urged Stroessner to bring political prisoners to trial, restore freedom of the press, stop contraband, end "police brutality," deal realistically with the problems of a "wretchedly underdeveloped economy," and enter into a dialogue with the church.

Figures cited by priests and bishops show Paraguay's average annual income is $205, 26 per cent of the population is illiterate, 15.4 per cent of public funds are spent on education.

By backing the Paraguayan bishops, the apostolic nuncio, Rt. Rev. Antonio Innocenti, has given their cause the sanction of Rome.

The bishops avoided direct conflict for months but the suppressed tension exploded on Oct. 22.

At noon that Wednesday, the police forcibly expelled from the country a Spanish Jesuit, Rev. Francisco de Paula Oliva, accused of encouraging students staging an anti-government hunger strike. That evening, 200 priests, nuns and students held a march to protest the expulsion.

The police and armed civilians—members of Stroessner's governing Colorady party—broke up the march and invaded a Jesuit residence, beating several priests, church spokesmen said.

Comunidad attempted to appear two days later with an account of the incident and an editorial which concluded: "One thing is certain: this regime will pass, and the men of this regime will pass, and the church will bury them."

The edition was seized before it got to the streets and Comunidad was closed.

The Episcopal Conference suspended all masses that weekend. Three officials—the minister of interior, the police chief and the chief of the security forces—were held responsible for attacking priests and were excommunicated.

London's Chinatown Resembles Section of Old Hong Kong

By JAMES CONWAY

LONDON (CP) — A visitor wandering off cosmopolitan Soho's better-known tourist tracks into Gerrard Street might think he had strayed into a bustling corner of Hong Kong.

Tucked behind theatre-lined Leicester Square, its narrow sidewalks and colorful store fronts form the heart of London's new Chinatown, the latest foreign settlement in a corner of the city which has absorbed successive waves of emigres from around the world to run its gourmet's gamut of restaurants.

Chinese food—promptly dubbed Chinky chuck by Cockneys—is rivalling fish and chips as a traditional complement to a Saturday night at a favorite pub.

Chinese restaurants and take-out food bars have sprouted like bean shoots across Britain from Penzance in Cornwall to Inverness in northern Scotland, increasing from a few dozen to several thousands in less than 20 years.

To cope with the oriental boom, Britain's Chinese population has swollen to an estimated 45,000. About 60 per cent work as waiters.

MAKE GOOD WAGES

More than 30,000 are from Hong Kong, the majority here as short-term residents working six- and seven-day weeks to support families still living in Britain's colonial enclave on the Chinese mainland.

As British passport-holders, Chinese workers were allowed unrestricted admission until limitations were placed on immigration in 1962.

Waiters can earn as much as £30 a week — good wages here—most of which they send back home. Many return home themselves in six months or so before they become liable to British social security and tax payments.

Mostly they live in cheap rooming houses in run-down areas of North London like Kilburn and Camden Town, unable to afford to live in high-priced Soho.

Unlike other non-European workers such as the West Indians and Pakistanis, the Chinese experience little discrimination or racially-inspired opposition. They form their own rigidly-guarded communities which few Europeans penetrate.

Around the nucleus of the restaurant trade has gathered a wide range of thriving businesses supplying every need for homesick Chinese.

GET SPECIAL RATES

In and around Gerrard Street, there are seven Chinese restaurants; three Chinese barber shops and a beauty salon; several book stores; a Chinese supermarket selling authentic ingredients for traditional dishes mostly imported from Communist China; a Chinese accountant, and a couple of hire-car companies offering special rates to Chinese seamen.

Some display signs warning non-Chinese they will not be welcome.

The Chinese are almost as avid newspaper readers as their British hosts. One news dealer brings in 2,000 copies of a Hong Kong paper by air freight each day; another circulates several thousand copies of The Overseas China Daily News all over Europe.

On streets radiating off Gerrard Street are other Chinese-run establishments nestling among the seedy clubs, strip joints and coffee shops which typify the less-glossy area of London's West End. Curiously enough, there isn't a traditional Chinese laundry.

Rumors about Chinese-run heroin and other drug rings are discounted by the police who report that the community is probably the least troublesome in the city.

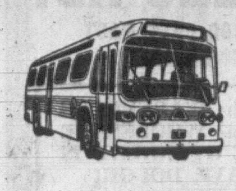

"The last opium raid we made was years ago," said a police official. "But we do look in on gambling from time to time."

Like Chinese everywhere, the ones in London love a gamble. The several hundred waiters footloose after the lunch rush, and before the pre-theatre dinner scramble, crowd the legal and illegal gambling clubs catering exclusively for them, playing mah-jong and a dice game called pai kau for stakes sometimes ranging into hundreds of pounds.

Other money-makers include roulette and a peculiar game described as a cross between bingo and the French Loterie Nationale.

There's No Easy Way to Give Up Cigarettes

WASHINGTON (WP) They chew gum, chomp on pipes, twiddle with worry beads and fool around with smooth little stones. And they scream at their wives, husbands and children.

Former ambassador Charles (Chip) Bohlen sucks on an old cigarette holder and Beverly Fisher, secretary to Sen. Frank L. Moss, chews Lifesavers.

The people who give up smoking admit there is no real palliative, but they keep looking.

One major executive who stopped puffing last Saturday keeps a pipe ready—"but I'll soon be through with it because it tastes so terrible." He's walking 2½ miles to work now "because I've got all that extra energy to burn off."

Some comments from a few whose New Year resolution was to cut out cigarettes:

From Mrs. Fisher: "I don't smoke in the office, but I still sneak about a pack after hours. If you write that, the senator may get after me."

From a writer: "My legs feel funny; that must be because the blood is starting to flow again."

From an executive: "My speech is slurred and I almost fall asleep at my desk. Even my lip feels like it's partially paralyzed."

FLU BUG ACTIVE

Musicians Get Needle

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Arts Centre Orchestra received a shot in the arm Tuesday — against influenza.

The group was exposed to the bug during a Beethoven concert last week, when guest violinist Christian Ferras performed despite illness. Today, about 15 members of the 44-member orchestra, along with some of the Stratford players rehearsing at the centre, received anti-flu shots from Dr. Byron Hyde.

Conductor Mario Bernardi was the first to volunteer. "I won't pull rank ever again, but I'm scared stiff," he said, as he rolled up the sleeve of his yellow turtle-neck and stood at attention, waiting for the jab.

Fellow-musicians, peering in at him through the first-air room door, had no mercy.

"Shall we give him a standing ovation when he's finished?" one taunted.

Oh! Calcutta! Shut Down, But Curious (Yellow) Goes

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Guardians of this city's morals have scored 50 per cent in their drive to protect citizens from allegedly salacious entertainment.

They helped put the play Oh! Calcutta! out of business, but they have failed to prevent the movie I Am Curious (Yellow) from public exhibition.

On Dec. 29, vice-squad officers seized prints of the Swedish film I Am Curious Yellow at five Los Angles theatres. An additional theatre cancelled showings of the movie, in which sexual intercourse is portrayed, after being notified of the raid.

All the theatres had been warned that the seizure would take place.

Backers of the film won a temporary restraining order against further seizures and it is being shown in seven Los Angeles theatres.

The actions against the play and film appear to be part of an uphill struggle by law enforcement agencies to clamp down on entertainment that deals flagrantly with sex. The struggle is uphill they say, because the U.S. Supreme Court in recent years has ruled out most of the traditional pornography laws and has set down strict guidelines on when the law can interfere in the areas of artistic expression.

Senior Acting Class Set For Uvic Phoenix Theatre

A senior acting class project under the direction of Frederick Edell is to be presented in the Phoenix Theatre at University of Victoria, starting Thursday and continuing through Monday.

The play, Tom Paine, by Paul Foster, is an example of contemporary revolutionary theatre. It is being done in co-operating with Leslie Thimming's improvisational music group.

Edell stresses that it is a play for mature audiences which came out of the La Mama improvisational workshop directed by Tom O'Horgan, the group that evolved Hair. Admission is free. Starting time is 8 p.m.

SAWS TO BLASTING POWDER STOLEN

Vandalism by Public Sweeps Log Sites

Thefts and vandalism at British Columbia logging operations are soaring as increasing thousands of outdoors enthusiasts use the industry's logging roads for free access to forest lands.

One industry estimate is that each year 150,000 to 200,000 British Columbians and out-of-province tourists are using company logging roads to hunt, fish, ski and engage in other outdoor activities.

But one forest products company, MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. reported today that thefts and wanton vandalism have cost the company and its employees about $100,000 within recent years. Other companies are experiencing the same problems.

Significantly, the incidence of thefts and vandalizm increases during the hunting season, said an MB spokesman.

He emphasized that this does not mean hunters are the only offenders since a small element of non-hunters take advantage of the hunting season in the fall to damage and steal equipment.

"In fact, members of the organized fish and game clubs and the B.C. Wildlife Federation are particularly responsible people and have an appreciation of the advantage of free public use of company logging roads," he said.

The MB spokesman said that in 1969 thefts and vandalism had cost the company more than $21,000. But almost one-third of these losses had occurred during September and October, the opening period of the hunting season.

"The type and scope of the thefts and damage to equipment is incredible," said the company spokesman.

Last year 34 power saws, each costing from $250 to $400, were stolen, along with a number of $1,200 portable radios, a 25-ton capacity hydraulic jack and air compressors valued at about $280 each.

Blasting powder, blasting caps and fuses up to 500 feet in length have been taken and these constitute a danger to the public when taken back to homes in B.C. communities.

Fire extinguishers and first-aid kits have been stolen which could lead to runaway forest fires or possibly loss of life if their disappearance is not noticed before a fire or an accident occurs.

Wrenches, pliers, screwdrivers, loggers rain clothing and gear owned by employees, tarpaulins, truck batteries, flashlights, even 1,500 to 2,000 candlepower floodlights used for night logging have been carried away. Whole drums of gasoline containing up to 45 gallons have been stolen.

In one case, a tire and wheel was taken from a logging crew bus, in another an eight-man tent vanished.

At one logging division near Port Alberni, half a day's production was lost because vandals dumped the fuel stored in the area and then drained the fuel tanks of the yarders and loaders and loosened cables supporting the heavy equipment.

In another instance, vandals took small timber toters used to haul logs, staged a rodeo in the woods, smashing the vehicles into one another.

Drums of fuel and the exhaust mufflers on logging trucks were punctured with bullet holes.

"This sort of senseless behaviour could lead to placing guards and patrols at the logging divisions," said the MB spokesman. "This would be a shame since it would interfere with the very freedom the public want when they head for the forests to escape city life."

It should be remembered, he said, that without the thousands of miles of roads, built by the logging industry, the public simply would not be able to reach thousands of square miles of forest lands, remote lakes and rivers. Vast outdoor areas would be accessible only to the privileged few who could afford to hire aircraft.

"The public has a big stake in the industry's public access program and we earnestly appeal for their support and co-operation," said the MB spokesman.

"The public can help to discourage and eliminate the few who are spoiling public access for the majority by taking the car licence number of suspected vandals and thieves and by reporting these or other suspicious activities to the RCMP or to the personnel office of the company which is involved."

BCGEU Head Slams Bargaining Denial

COMOX — Denial of collective bargaining rights for B.C. Government employees is a form of disenchantment, a union leader said here Tuesday night.

Norman T. Richards, president of the B.C. Government Employees' Union, (BCGEU) told the union's Comox branch that by withholding bargaining rights, the provincial government is excluding its employees from voting rights enjoyed by all other organized workers.

"Under collective bargaining, union members decide by vote whether or not to accept wages and working conditions offered by their employer," he said.

"In my book, this voting privilege is just as vital a democratic right as the right to vote in a political sense."

He told branch members the union may go before B.C.'s Human Rights Commission with a brief contending that the government's denial of bargaining rights is a denial of basic human rights.

The BCGEU has mounted a campaign to get full collective bargaining, including the right to negotiate directly with the government, instead of the intermediary Civil Service Commission, on wages and working conditions.

BODY OF GEOLOGIST FOUND NEAR P. HARDY

PORT HARDY (CP) — The body of Vancouver geologist Ram Singh, 25, was found near here Tuesday. Police said he apparently died of exposure after becoming separated from a companion last Friday while on a field trip near this Vancouver Island community.

Duncan Mayor Criticized Over Non-Mill

DUNCAN — Mayor Jim Quaife's claim that a pulp mill will be built at Cowichan Bay came under attack again today.

Dr. Charles Ennals, a Social Credit candidate who came close to upsetting MLA Robert Strachan in the last provincial election, said the charges are "unfounded, bordering on the irresponsible" and a phoney issue to scare the Cowichan Bay residents into joining the city.

The statements by Quaife are scandalous and he is "playing games with the future of the people of Cowichan Bay."

Ennals, who already has been nominated again as a candidate for whenever the next election is, said the concern Quaife has for the preservation of the recreational area is appreciated and shared by many involved in public affairs. "But the ill-founded suggestion that mysterious forces are at work is a misuse of office."

Quaife reported at the installation of city council Jan. 5 that he had it on "good authority" that a start would be made on a pulp mill in April. He refused to divulge the source of his information.

Such charges have been made before and stoutly denied by Canadian Pacific Railway and its subsidiaries, Pacific Logging and CP Investments.

Earlier this week, Resources Minister Ray Williston said CPR logging interests had a sufficient supply of logs on its E & N Railway lands to keep a pulp mill in operation. But he said no water use or pulp mill licences had been applied for by the company.

"If and when an application is made, it could take up to six months or more to obtain, if the government was prepared to grant it."

'ALARM THE PUBLIC'

Ennals said Quaife had letters on file from the water resources branch pointing out that no applications for water rights involving major amounts of water from the Cowichan River have been received.

He said Quaife's efforts to "alarm the public" were based on other reasons. "I have wondered whether all this doesn't simply hide some territorial ambitions.

"Can it be that the mayor would like the residents of Cowichan Bay to approve a merger of their community with the city of Duncan?"

Ennals said scaring the Cowichan Bay residents by using such a "phoney issue" was scandalous. He said if it turned out that Cowichan Bay was to get a pulp mill, which he doubted, he would be in the forefront opposing it.

'CHOICE IS THEIRS'

Quaife denied he was trying to hide behind other issues when queried by telephone today. "The people of Cowichan Bay are well aware of the city's stand to welcome them into the city, but the choice is theirs to make, not ours.

"Dr. Ennals is a well-known government mouthpiece and is only acting as an apologist for the lack of action and irresponsibility of the government on pollution control.

"It is what I would expect from him and I suspect he is trying to blow a bit of smoke himself."

He said he had been told Ennals had written a letter to the city office regarding his charges but no letter had yet been received.

Malaspina Classes Back

NANAIMO — Building renovations were already under way at Malaspina College as 500 students returned to classes Monday for the school's second semester.

The college is located in the former Nanaimo General Hospital buildings. Second floor of an annex building has been converted to a lecture hall. On the ground floor physics and electronis laboratories are being readied.

A former cafeteria will become part of the library, while the registrar and secretary-treasurer and administative staff will move into a lecture hall.

An auxiliary building will house an enlarged cafeteria, with space for a student lounge, student association and newspaper.

Society Plans To Revive Fair

LADYSMITH — The revival of Ladysmith Agricultural Society, dormant for the last nine years, will be discussed at a meeting in mid-January.

The last agricultural fair—once the highlight of the year in Ladysmith—was in 1961. Since that time the society members have met only occasionally to pay annual dues and to keep the organization intact.

Council Ruling On Parking Seen

Victoria city council will decide within the next two weeks whether to permit downtown property owners to hold an area vote on a new parking facility.

The property owners have already asked council for permission to hold the vote to build a 400-space $1.25 million parking building on Johnson Street.

The city's public works committee agreed Monday that a vote should be held but couldn't decide on whether to go for the total $1.25 million or half that amount.

Discussions will be held with the downtown businessmen to ascertain how much parking is urgent and how much can be delayed until the money market is easier.

In other business the committee decided to hold to its line of protest to B.C. Hydro regarding the installation of overhead power lines on Burnside Road.

Hydro has informed council that the cost of installing underground wiring is prohibitive.

But Ald. Tom Christie pointed out that in the latest annual report of Hydro reference was made to the installation of 11 miles of underground wiring in West Vancouver.

"If they can do it over there they can do it here," he said.

South Africa Accused of Murdering Prisoners

By ROBERT H. ESTABROOK

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (WP) — An exiled South African journalist has accused the South African government of "murdering" African prisoners who had died in jail.

Mary Benson told a working group of the United Nations Human Rights Commission that 11 persons had died in jail, seven of them as apparent suicides. She singled out one prison official as a "sadist."

South African Ambassador Matthys I. Botha termed the charge "nonsensical" and "a big lie."

"We do not murder prisoners," he said, noting that the International Red Cross had investigated prison conditions in South Africa.

Miss Benson, who is white, testified against the trial of 22 Africans under the Suppression of Communism Act for alleged associations with the banned African National Congress (ANC).

She alleged that the government had engaged in "cruel and horrible" treatment including torture, of the 17 men and five women arrested last May and June. The trial, which began Dec. 1 in Pretoria, recessed Dec. 15 until Feb. 16.

Among the witnesses held in jail is Snanti Naidoo, daughter of the adopted son of Mahatma Gandhi. Miss Benson charged that Miss Naidoo had been tortured in an effort to force her to testify against Mrs. Winnie Mandela, wife of Nelson Mandela, a former ANC leader now serving a life sentence.

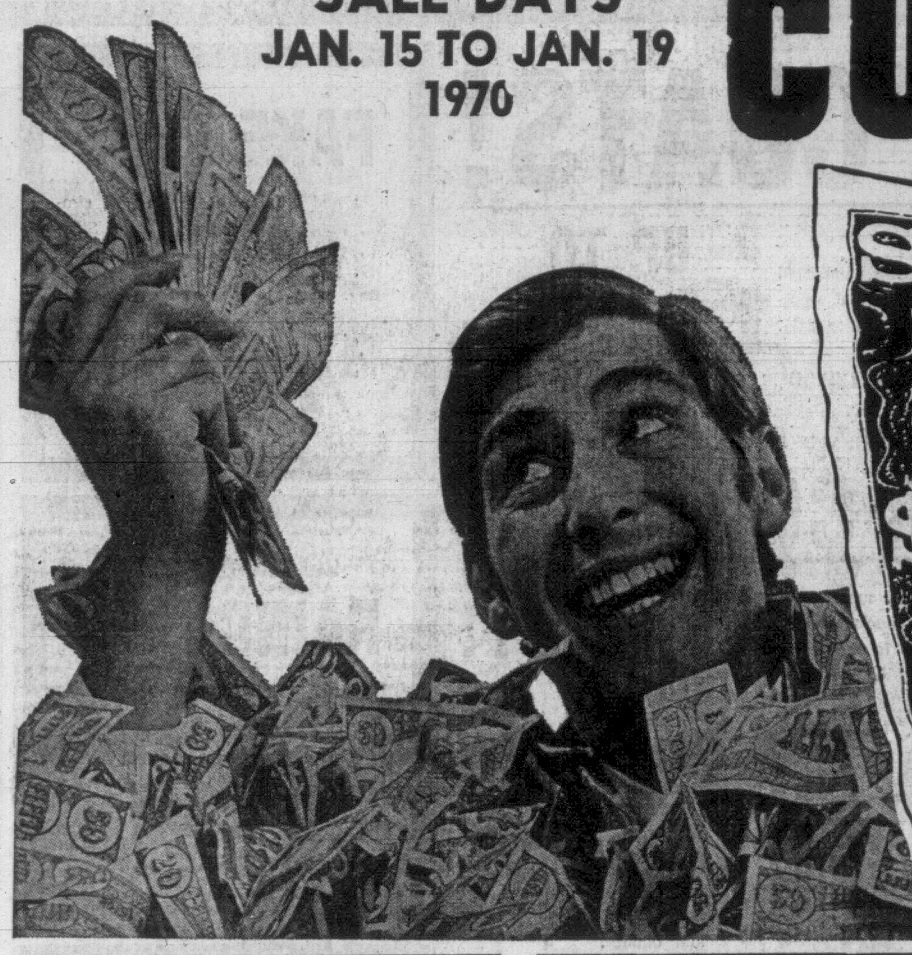

Miss Benson was permitted to leave South Africa in 1966, four years after her passport had been withdrawn.

In addition to preparing a report on conditions in Southern Africa, the six-member committee of the Human Rights Commission also is to report on alleged Israel violations of Geneva Convention provisions on treatment of civilians in occupied territories.

Israel has refused to admit the mission unless it also investigates conditions among Jews in Arab countries. An Israeli note to Secretary General U Thant released Thursday reiterated the refusal to co-operate because, it said, the participation of Somalia, Yugoslavia and Ceylon on the mission guarantees an "anti-Israel bias."

Warning Sounded on 'Irrelevant' Canadian Diplomacy

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian diplomacy has been marked by intelligence, sublety and imagination but it is also in danger of becoming irrelevant, the Commons external affairs committee was told Tuesday by French commentator Claude Julien.

"It always surprises Europeans when Canadians ask if they have a national identity," Mr. Julien said.

"The question is devoid of relevance.

"Canada has its own personality for Europeans, thanks to a typically Canadian foreign policy which is quite different from the policies of other countries."

But, he warned, if Canada hopes to continue to exercise a distinctive influence in the world it will have to act in concert with other middle-sized nations. Greater contact with Japan and Western Europe was necessary to offset the predominant influence of the United States on Canadian interests.

"If Canadians go on as they do now, I wonder if they will be able to display a personality in time to come," said Mr. Julien, foreign affairs critic for the Paris newspaper Le Monde.

Mr. Julien agreed with committee members that better relations between France and Canada would improve the prospects of Canadian independence.

"France must realize that her relations with Quebec cannot prevent good relations with Ottawa. We have to realize that France and Canada have a special role to play.

"In that respect, I think our France's policy is getting wiser."

Canada's attitude, meanwhile, would have to change as it becomes more likely that Britain will enter the European Common Market. "Canada should not be squeezed between 200,000,000 Americans and 200,000,000 Europeans."

Instead, it should look to Great Britain and France to defend its diplomatic and trading interests in Europe. "That's a card for you to play."

Crackdown On Methadone

By CARL BERNSTEIN

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs (BNDO) is drafting federal regulations to tightly control the distribution of methadone — the controversial heroin substitute used in narcotics treatment programs.

The regulations, expected to be issued in February, are designed to minimize the possibility of methadone overdoses and to curtail illegal street traffic of the drug, according to bureau officials.

The U.S. Attorney's office here summoned the sponsors of public and private methadone treatment programs in Washington to a meeting Thursday at which they were informed of the upcoming regulations.

The loose distribution of methadone in some addict treatment programs is creating a flourishing underground market for the drug in several cities—including Washington, according to Gene R. Haislip, assistant to the Bureau of Narcotics' deputy director.

The drug's increasing availability on the street, he said, has resulted in overdosing by heroin addicts who are unfamiliar with methadone's higher potency. The bureau believes more than 100 addicts have died from methadone in the past year, according to Haislip.

Vigorous Prosecution Promised

Assistant U.S. Attorney Luke C. Moore issued a statement after the meeting warning that violations of the new regulations will be "vigorously prosecuted."

He said that present distribution practices of some private physicians and addict treatment programs using methadone would be illegal under the Bureau of Narcotics' new rules.

The regulations are being drafted in the midst of a growing national debate over methadone, a powerful drug that is being used in about 30 public treatment projects across the country as a cheap, non-euphoric substitute for heroin.

Overdoses of the drug—which, like heroin, is highly addictive—have been responsible for two recent deaths in Fairfax County, Va., according to authorities there.

Key elements of the new rules would limit the dosage of methadone a physician or clinic could prescribe for patients and require that use of the drug be accompanied by a thorough rehabilitation program.

"The whole purpose" of the bureau's regulations, Haislip said, "is to take methadone off the street."

Dosage Reduction One Answer

The drug, which costs clinics less than $2 a day to satisfy an addict's craving, is selling for $18 to $22 per daily dosage on the street, according to Haislip.

He said the new regulations would require that addicts undergoing initial methadone treatment receive smaller quantities of the drug than patients already using the heroin substitute. Such a policy, Haislip said, would not allow an addict beginning treatment to have enough methadone to suffer an overdose or sell any excess supply on the street.

He added that the regulations, to become law as part of the Harrison Narcotics Act, will also prohibit the manufacture of methadone in forms necessitating that the drug be injected by needle—as heroin most often is.

The proponents of methadone treatment programs argue that the drug's low price eliminates the addict's necessity to steal to maintain his habit. Although addicting, it permits the user to work, go to school or pursue most other normal activities without the chronic, nagging hunger for drugs. Mental processes are virtually unimpaired while under influence of the drug, which produces no "high."

Methadone's detractors charge that the drug supply simply substitutes one form of addiction for another. It's long-term effects are still unknown, and there is great danger of overdosing if it is not used under the strictest supervision.

MULTI-MILLION-DOLLAR sewerage program in Saanich is under way with initial contract costing just over $200,000 in Glanford Gardens, Tillicum-Whiteside and Rolston Crescent areas. Work pictured is behind Jones Terrace. This contract should be completed by early summer and connection indicated for year-end when regional district's trunk sewer is expected to be completed from Hyacinth Park to city northwest sewer system. Balance of the sewering in 3,400 acres is expected to be completed within four years.

'Public Pressure' Will Change Law

Liberalized abortion laws will only come about when the public puts pressure on the medical profession, a University of British Columbia medical geneticist said at the University of Victoria Tuesday.

"The medical profession only gives those services the population demands," said Dr. J. R. Miller in a talk to about 100 persons.

"When the population demands abortions and puts pressure on them, they'll give in and the law will be changed, but this won't happen until there's a movement."

Dr. Miller said people who request a legal sterilization often have difficulty finding someone to perform the operation. He cited the case of a retarded woman with a genetic disease who requested sterilization after giving birth to an illegitimate child.

The request was turned down by a Vancouver General Hospital committee.

"Their excuse was that they're in the health business, but if that's so then their definition of health just isn't wide enough.

"For too long we've hidden behind a barrier of professionalism and said the public wouldn't understand, but we're dealing with a population that is more and more educated in biological matters."

Dr. Miller said the most humane and efficent way of selection against genetic disease is through a program of prenatal detection of disease coupled with abortion and genetic counselling.

"The prime minister talks of the 70s as the decade of genetic engineering and many people talk glibly of how this will be achieved, but we find that the means of practically doing things now are prohibited by law or professional or general ignorance."

Youth Group Seeks Drivers

Victoria Youth Council is looking for drivers who can transport elderly people to and from their rest homes as part of the VYC's Silver Threads service.

Persons who own cars and would like to volunteer their services at 1 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. Wednesdays are asked to call Rob Anderson, 388-9449.

Chargex Splurge

VANCOUVER (CP) — In a three-day shopping spree waitress Evelyn Grypiuk splurged $1,200 on clothes and cosmetics — with someone else's Chargex card.

Appearing in provincial court Tuesday, she pleaded guilty to nine counts of obtaining goods by false pretences from 18 stores in Vancouver, Burnaby and North Vancouver.

She was remanded for sentence to Jan. 27.

Two Women Injured In Four-Car Accident

A rear-end crash involving four cars on the Patricia Bay Highway at 4:45 p.m. Tuesday sent two women to hospital with minor injuries.

Katherine Lawson, 20, of 1500 Shasta, and Willa Campbell, 19, of 340 Moses Point Road, Sidney, were treated and released from Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Police say car with an unidentified driver went into the ditch on Mow's Hill and traffic was stopping to allow the vehicle to be towed out.

The first car in the waiting line was driven by John Newman of Vancouver who was rear-ended by a car driven by John Paynter, 2965 McAnnally, Saanich, who was hit by the girls' car.

Exceeds Quota

The Red Cross Campaign for the B.C.-Yukon Division has exceeded by $517 the quota of $725,000 set for 1969.

The figures, announced by chairman Walter McCann, indicate that 85 per cent of the funds in the division come from United Appeal areas and the remainder came from individual branch and committee campaigns.

Big Sewerage Plan Endorsed

A four-year sewerage schedule was endorsed Tuesday night by Saanich public works committee.

The schedule covers sewering of 3,400 acres adjacent to the current sewered lands—an area three-quarters the size of the city of Victoria.

Approximate estimate of the cost of lateral and sub-trunk pipes is almost $5 million, municipal engineer Neville Life told the committee.

Expenditures—including more than $200,000 worth of work already under way—will be financed by the sewerage enterprise which ratepayers approved in 1968.

The added costs will increase the current $22 per property sewer charge (less various rebates for many residents) but the amount of the increase won't be known until the specific borrowing occurs.

The schedule shows:

Areas 1 and 3, totalling $2,360,000 and including $250,000 of the current contract, West Burnside-Carey-Glanford, further north on Glanford, and the general area along McKenzie, 1970-1972;

Area 2A, $150,000, south of Mount Douglas and east and west of Shelbourne, north of Feltham, 1970 or 1972;

Area 2B, $1,090,000, sections of northeast Gordon Head and a smaller area southeast of Gordon Head Road, 1970-71;

Area 3, east of Quadra, $520,000, 1971-72;

Area 4, $770,000, Feltham north to the sea and Mount Douglas east to roughly Tyndall, 1972.

Areas 2A and 3 will be reviewed later when firmer dates are available for regional trunk line work.

Residents Split On Street Lights

Residents of Ten Mile Point in Saanich have split opinions on street lighting for their area.

They were asked for opinions in a survey initiated last year by Mayor Hugh Curtis.

The replies, from more than 90 per cent of the residents, showed:

Forty per cent don't want street lights; 35 per cent favor further consideration; and 25 per cent want them at main roads.

An accident study showed no particular problem at nights at three intersections.

Public works committee decided Tuesday night to ask the police department for a report on the advisability of street lights, from the point of view of safety.

The committee endorsed a start on road work costing $100,000 on Interurban Road, north to Alan, and $38,000 on Glanford Avenue, Carey to McKenzie.

Extension of four lanes on Quadra Street from Nicholson to Rogers was also approved.

A local improvement will be initiated costing $260,000, of which $29,000 would be charged to neighboring property owners. The provincial government will be asked for a half-share on the secondary highway.

A start was endorsed on $77,400 of a proposed $152,850 drainage program. Biggest single item was $38,000 for a sea outfall at Alpine.

A contentious curve on McKenzie Avenue, which has divided council and aroused some public reaction, may be rebanked.

At present, the curve immediately east of Harrop Road is sloped towards the edge of McKenzie, rather than towards centre.

Cost of rebanking was estimated at $1,800 and was recommended in a 3-to-2 vote.

force of law certainly will be within our purview.

"From the point of view of their (regulations) complexity and size, if we can simplify them, eradicate contradictions, and in any cases where they go beyond the authority of the statute, point that out and recommend changes — that would be an important part of our function."

That appears almost an invitation to social work agencies and lawyers, who complain that arbitrary bureaucratic processing of welfare applications goes undetected because it is governed by hidden regulations, to ask the commission for a review of the situation.

Open to Suggestion

While the three-man commission (Fulton as part-time chairman, former law professor and one-time counsel to the Ontario Law Commission Richard Gosse as full-time member, and a third part-time appointment imminent) will receive direction for some of its studies from the attorney-general's department "but we will initiate certain studies on our own motion and will entertain suggestions from any quarter."

One aspect of provincial law which parallels the larger area of criminal justice under federal jurisdiction that seems certain to receive the B.C. commission's early scrutiny is the unfair impact of fines as a penalty when they land on the poor.

Involved is not only the apparent imbalance of a sentence which equates a $150 fine with three months in jail but also the question of whether the same sentence should enable a moneyed man to pay a fine and escape jail, virtually impoverish another man to escape jail and imprison a third man because he can't meet the tariff put on liberty.

Not Consistent

"It certainly is an injustice if the difference in financial resources influences the resulting treatment meted out as between different individuals," said Fulton.

"That's not consistent with justice and it's an area to which we well should give study."

Fulton points out that the Criminal Code's sentencing provisions were amended by the federal government years ago to enable judges to postpone fines or schedule instalment payments when the convicted person was not able to bear the financial penalty forthwith.

Provincial laws are excluded from the criminal field but provide the ultimate penalty of jail for those who won't pay the fines in the first instance. Although discretion may be allowed judges, the absence of specific amendment as in the Criminal Code can result in provincial laws for the rich and the poor.

"We should find out how many provincial statutes are apt to work against the individual and make the desireable reforms," said Fulton.

Major Strides

The federal government already has made some major strides in evening up the treatment of persons who become involved in criminal law.

On New Year's Day, as a result of implementing only a small part of the four-year federal study, headed by Mr. Justice Roger Ouimet, persons arrested under Criminal Code provisions to await trial could be released on their own recognizance at the discretion of the police.

In communities like Victoria which have no night or weekend courts to serve the public—and only the prominent are likely to obtain special bail arrangements—the federal reform will enable police to avoid some of the tragic absurdities of inflexible red tape requirements.

A Victoria social worker, who specializes in the fields of alcoholism and poverty, says the mere overnight jailing of some men and women, who feel bewildered and helpless by society's demands to begin with, so frightens them that they'll plead guilty to almost any charge in the morning in the hopes the nightmare will end in some miraculous manner.

Vicious Circle

The provincial attorney-general's department has pioneered several compassionate and successful programs at helping such people in recent years. It's guidelines have sharply reduced the cycle of police roundups of every inebriated pedestrian in sight—which kept some unfortunates in a vicious cycle between jail and beer parlors through most of their lives.

Motorists too—and the public at large—have seen the common sense in the 24-hour roadside licence suspensions. Improvements in handling of juvenile cases—despite a jurisdictional controversy with Ottawa—have been pressed by B.C. too.

It has made great progress in revamping the courts of the province and also has removed some of concern over gross disparity in some sentences by holding an annual workshop for police court judges in search of more uniformity of sentences.

Fulton said these are vital areas and might involve the commission in some research but "these areas are not curable by law reform—rather I think they must be attacked on a number of fronts as the attorney-general appears to be doing."

However, he agreed that a recent sentence of a youth in Nanaimo which included the order that his long hair be cut "was treading on dangerous ground and one should be very much concerned with those things which are properly subject to personal decision such as appearance."

The federal government's current thrusts into new laws are heavily slanted towards protecting such personal decisions from arbitrary intrusions by society.

"We must have law that people can believe in, that is enforceable and compassionate," Justice Minister Turner said recently.

"It is in criminal law that our most fundamental values are protected and we must have the right to privacy and equal access."

Encouraging

Nationally-known professor of criminology, J. A. Edmison of the University of Ottawa, only last week described here the federal government's initiatives towards law reform as "tremendously encouraging."

He also made the point that society must recognize the changeability of customs so that rigid discrimination is not institutionalized by law, noting that dancing once was regarded as sinful and only 100 years ago young men who shaved were condemned as effeminate.

Fresh looks at many other traditional attitudes are assured by the study being given to the Ouimet report's scores of recommendations to the federal government.

The report contends a major change is needed in the habitual criminal procedure which now allows indefinite imprisonment on an arbitrary assessment of a person's attitude—a situation which has brought considerable protest against the Vancouver city prosecutor's office where the provision has been used relatively often.

Its tenor also ensures another long-standing law which has fallen almost exclusively on the poor—the vagrancy section—will be re-examined by lawmakers just as it has recently come under more critical scrutiny by the courts.

A Vancouver youth, described as a "hippie," last fall was charged and convicted in Winnipeg as a vagrant simply on the grounds that he had no money.

But the Manitoba appeal court quashed the conviction with some biting comments that no one should assume the law's purpose "is to stigmatize as criminal every young person who travels across the country without employment and with little money in his pocket.

Not a Crime

"It is not a crime to be without apparent means of support," the high court warned police and magistrates.

The launching of a permanent criminal law reform commission, as recommended in the Ouimet report, undoubtedly will bring more long-accepted but dubious law under a spotlight to show up imperfections that can be suitably remedied by Parliament.

But if a full sense of justice is to be served and if our courts are to enjoy complete respect there is one other reform that is needed—a reform of attitude.

Too often politicians glibly assume that installing a robed appointee on a dias above everyone else, surrounding him with fine teak panelling or marble, putting the flag or monarch's portrait behind him and giving him the title of a judge is all that's needed to assure respect.

Partisan

The public isn't stupid or forgetful. It remembers where some of these appointees came from—the partisan battleground of politics in elected assemblies and convention hotel rooms.

Political activity is the best civics qualification for even the most diminutive lawyer who mounts that elevated bench, but partisanship is not.

It is particularly a drawback when people retain a lingering suspicion that the man who dispenses justice in their name is in fact allied with the existing establishment, not the body politic.

However unwarranted, an unspoken belief that integrity and competence were not as important as partisanship to a specific ideology or faction in the selection of a jurist can only taint the aura government tries to produce in the courtroom.

System's Friend

The poor and all those who feel oppressed by our society seldom believe in their hearts that they can have a fair hearing from a man they think was installed by their oppressors as a friend.

The particular political affiliation is of no consequence: what matters is the fear that a man who, they believe, has sold out to the system of getting ahead will not adjudicate impartially when some manifestation or other friend of that system is an issue.

Yet this doubt could be dispelled by simply changing the method of selection because all of our political parties have men of integrity who are learned in the law and would adorn any bench—but would shine more brightly if appointed by an opposing party in power.

Hudson's Bay Company

An Historical Exhibit

On May 2nd, 1670, King Charles II granted a Royal Charter to The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay. Today, in 1970—after 300 years of adventuring and trading in North America — the Hudson's Bay Company has a rich historical background, one that is closely linked with the history of Canada.

An exhibit of this unique historical collection is now on display in the Hudson's Bay store. Designed with brilliant visual effects, the exhibit traces the activities of the Company over the past three centuries. From Radisson and Des Groseilliers to the present day. Dramatically mounted in a contemporary style, it presents all manner of archive material. Early trading goods, maps, a model of the "Nonsuch", illustrations of famous Company men, merchandise typical of the kind of articles offered the public in turn-of-the-century saleshops.

It is an exciting view of one of the world's oldest companies. Be sure to see it now as the Hudson's Bay Company begins an age of new adventure.

Colonel the Honourable John R. Nicholson, P.C., O.B.E., Q.C., LL.D., Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, will open this exhibit Thursday at 11 a.m., fourth floor.

Driver Refused to Take Test, Pays Total of $425 in Fines

Norman Rebbit, 1480 Charlton, was fined a total of $425 in court Tuesday by Judge William Ostler when he pleaded guilty to impaired driving and refusing to take a breathalyzer test.

Rebbit received fines of $350 for the impaired charge and $75 for the breathalyzer offence.

The accused was stopped Jan. 12 after he had driven through a red light on Government.

He had to be placed by the arresting officers physically into the police wagon to be taken to the station where he refused to give a sample of his breath.

"You had better stay on the farm," Ostler told the accused who said he lived on the farm where he worked.

Rebbit was also prohibited from driving in Canada for six months.

A charge of false pretences against a 28-year-old Duncan man was dismissed when the Crown could not establish whether the accused had obtained the funds from a cheque he allegedly received through false pretence.

Hendricus G. Haamers sold a car to a Victoria used car lot Dec. 12, stating the car was free of encumbrances when he still owed payments on the vehicle to the Duncan car dealership where he purchased it last April.

Haamers was given a cheque by the Victoria firm Dec. 12 that was later cashed but the Crown gave no evidence to show by whom.

Michael Smith, 1726 Stanley, was fined $50 when he pleaded guilty to common assault.

Smith had pushed his landlady when he became annoyed at being locked out of his apartment Dec. 26.

The landlady had fallen down some stairs as a result of the accused's action.

"Fortunately there was no injury," Ostler told Smith.

Glen W. Jensen, 19, an inmate at the William Head Unit and due for release in February, 1971, was sentenced to one year to be served concurrently with his earlier sentence.

Jensen pleaded guilty to stealing a car last June in Chilliwack when he and two companions escaped from a mainland prison.

The accused had been serving a sentence for breaking and entering and theft and possession of stolen property and has since been convicted of escaping lawful custody.

Scott A. Robinson, 27, of Sooke, was fined $350 for impaired driving and $75 for failing to submit to a breathalyzer test.

Ostler suspended his driver's licence.

The accused had driven a car on View and attempted to turn on to Broad, almost turning it over, court was told.

Arthur Murphy, 55, of 260 Gorge, was fined $350 for impaired driving. His licence was suspnded for four months.

The accused had been in a minor accident at Government and Johnson Dec. 20.

James B. O'Neill, 32, of 1712 Newton, was fined $200 for having a blood-alcohol content over .08 per cent while driving a car.

His license was suspended for three months.

Harrison crossed the centre line several times, hit a traffic island and drove at speeds up to 60 m.p.h. while driving near Cedar Hill Cross Road and Finnerty.

Linda Thomas, 35, of 289 Rudyard Road, was fined $100 for shoplifting and placed on nine-month probation.

She was observed taking a pair of slacks and a sweater, valued at $32 and the property of The Bay Dec. 13.

KOOTENAY FILM WINS U.S. AWARD

The provincial department of travel industry has won an award for a 24-minute film on the East Kootenay region of B.C.

A Place of Refuge, photographed and directed by Bill Wiley of the film and photographic branch, was chosen over 20 other entries in its class at the second annual film festival sponsored by Sunset Magazine, California.

The award consits of $250 cash and a testimonial plaque. The film, 18 months in the making, illustrates the four seasons in the East Kootenays and will be distributed in the U.S. as part of the Canadian government's program to promote tourism in Canada.

Demonstration Report Denied

In a news story Jan. 7, the Times reported that Mrs. Edith Marion Valens had been re-assigned as secretary to Welfare Minister Gaglardi.

Mrs. Valens was further identified as having been among a crowd of pro-Gaglardi demonstrators who invaded the legislative galleries in March, 1968, shortly after Gaglardi resigned as minister of highways.

Mrs. Valens has informed the Times that she was present in the legislative gallery as a spectator only and that she did not participate in the demonstration.

The Times regrets any embarrassment caused Mrs. Valens by the Jan. 7 news report.

Psychiatric Aides Rejoining Big Union

There are 85 psychiatric aides in the group, which split from the union last February to form the Federation of Professional and Technical Employees with the 1,000-member Psychiatric Nurses' Association of B.C. and other mental hospital employees such as cooks, clerks and firemen.

There were 250 members when the federation disbanded last month.

"Both groups recognize that employees of the provincial government will achieve better working conditions and wages only through one strong and united union," said a joint statement by BCGEU general secretary John Fryer and Dwight Denham, former federation secretary.

KELOWNA (CP)—Mayor Hilbert Roth said in an interview Tuesday that Resources Minister Ray Williston should "definitely state" the government's attitude toward possible construction of a pulp mill in the Okanagan district. He said he felt a pulp mill in the North Okanagan would "strike a death knell" for lakes in the region. Crown Zellerback Canada Ltd. announced recently that it is making preliminary studies for an Okanagan mill.

Egyptian Army Image Suffers After Attacks

By DAVID HIRST
The Manchester Guardian

CAIRO — Egypt's President Gamal Nasser is facing increasing difficulties in one of his major preoccupations: preserving public confidence in his armed forces.

Egypt claims to have driven off Israeli aircraft attempting to strike last week at targets in the Nile Delta, including one only 20 miles from Cairo. (In Tel Aviv, however, Israeli sources claimed the planes met little resistance.) But if Israel continues such bold incursions—and there is little doubt that it will—the Egyptians will have to give as good as they get if the image of an army and air force rebuilt since the 1967 war, and steadily growing in strength and confidence, is to be kept intact.

Israel's latest venture, the kidnapping of an entire Soviet-built radar station, has been profoundly embarrassing to the Egyptians. There has been complete official silence about the exploit and government spokesmen questioned about it have refused to comment. To discerning Egyptian observers, such coyness is tantamount to an admission that the raid took place, since the government normally replies to Israeli claims with elaborate counter-claims.

Year of Liberation Going Fast

Although from time to time the Egyptians have managed to convince impartial observers that the Israelis tell less than the whole truth, their own claims are more often thoroughly unconvincing. Al Ahram, Cairo's major newspaper, has acquired a military editor who reportedly knows little about military affairs, but writes what the army tells him to write.

In Beirut the Israeli exploit caused widespread consternation among those who still pin some hopes on Egyptian military prowess. In Egypt, where anything but the official version of events is harder to come by, the effect has been less immediately damaging. But there is little doubt that this and other such episodes are contributing to a general sense of frustration and despondency.

The performance of the Egyptian air force is what worries people most. The official line since the big aerial battles of July has been that Egypt chooses the time and place of any engagement, thereby defeating Israeli attempts to draw the Egyptian air force into a trap.

Egyptian Claims Unconvincing

It is difficult, however, for the man in the street to understand why this policy should be taken to such lengths that, as happened not long ago, an enemy aircraft was permitted to make unhindered a low pass over Cairo.

The vagueness and contradictions of Egyptian strategy are all too obvious.

On the one hand Egypt is supposed to be fighting a war of attrition. Nasser recently announced that he already has an army of half a million men (no one knows how he arrived at the figure) and that he intends to increase it to a million. Mohammed Haikal, Al Ahram's editor and Nasser's confidant, has been writing about the seventies as the decade of war. In other words, defeating Israel is going to be a long haul.

Contradictions Too Obvious

Yet at the same time the propaganda surrounding every Egyptian exploit tends to create the impression that the armed forces, already superior to the enemy, are only awaiting the signal to enter the final "battle of destiny." It is now several months since Defence Minister Mohammed Fawzi said his army had embarked on the "Year of Liberation."

It looks more and more as if the Egyptian regime, forgetting the "self-criticism" of the immediate post-war period, is slipping back into its old habits of mendacity which are bound to boomerang in the end.

If Egyptians in general are dispirited, the armed forces must be more so, and probably restless too.

Experts say that Egyptian pilots find themselves no match for the enemy and cannot begin to acquire the confidence they so badly need. The morale of soldiers on the ground, resentful at the lack of air cover, cannot be much higher.

Surely, one says to Egyptians, it cannot be long before someone in the army revolts. This is the logical thing to conclude, is a typical reply, anywhere but in Egypt.

Hydro Blues Tops Hit Parade

The Cypress Bowl Reel, Car Insurance Rock Popular

By BRUCE YEMEN

Premier W. A. C. Bennett has zoomed to the top of the legislative "hit parade" in the past two weeks.

He did it without opening his mouth.

The legislative hit parade is a speculative and only fancifully musical listing suggesting which cabinet ministers can be expected to get hit hardest by the opposition on which issues during the first session of the 29th legislature opening next week.

Reels should be fiddled rather than sung, of course, but the opposition can be expected to take a dim view of fiddling, step-dancing and almost every other type of activity related to the controversial West Vancouver ski development.

But it appears that Premier Bennett has taken a firm hold on top spot with a new number, the B.C. Hydro Blues, released just the other day by Dr. Gordon Shrum. Long regarded as a capable Bennett accompanist, Shrum found himself in a solo number when he announced a hydro rate increase.

Bennett will probably get most of the royalties from the opposition in the legislature.

With Williston firmly in the second spot, third place goes to Attorney-General Peterson for the Car Insurance Rock, which is what his opponents will claim he pulled when he suggested that car insurance rates would decrease under the government's compulsory insurance plan.

Premier Bennett will probably be identified by the opposition as both composer and conductor, but he may insist that the symphony was accidentally created when a number of government agencies decided to publicize their activities simultaneous with the Aug. 27, provincial election campaign.

The opposition will want to know how much it cost to perform the symphony.

In the fifth spot is a familiar number called the Parkland Shuffle, with a special verse devoted to the trade of timber rights in Strathcona Park for potential new parkland at Cape Scott.

Recreation Minister Ken Kiernan knows all the words to this one by heart.

The second echelon hit-paraders should not be underestimated. They could rise higher in the charts with just a few more spins on the political airwaves.

They are as follows:

6. The Welfare Stomp, performed with dash and panache by Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi, with appropriate gasps from onlookers, including welfare workers and recipients.

7. The Pollution Waltz, in which various government ministers will dance to the tune of the Hesitation Waltz until they're sure the public is ready to help pay the shot.

8. The Education Tango, in which Education Minister Brothers travels to Paris for an international conference and returns to find that it not only took two to make policy in his department — but his temporary replacement, Ray Williston, has announced a complete switch on school construction policy.

9. The Hospital Rhumba, featuring some unusual motion in Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's backfield, which (switching metaphors) will be identified as potential quarterback Dr. Scott Wallace, Oak Bay Socred MLA. Loffmark will be accused of missing some signals on construction of hospital facilities and Wallace too may blow the whistle on him if he goes offside.

10. The Public Works Chant, a traditional hit in which Social Credit theory (A plus B theorem) and other favorite homilies of Public Works Minister Chant will be good-naturedly kicked around. But Chant's public stand against building large city squares (because they encourage riots) will be seriously questioned by Vancouver MLAs.

There are, of course, a large number of "oldies but goodies" whose familiar refrains will waft up to the public galleries.

These include the Anti-Labor Anthem, the Hansard Howl, and the Bill Clancey Twist.

Although the legislature is primarily intended to give the opposition parties an opportunity to give critical if not always fair study to the government's performance, Premier Bennett will probably succeed in leading the Social Credit sing-out group in the most jubilant political tune of all.

It might be entitled the Ballad of Aug. 27 and it will be great on length, long on repetition and hard on the opposition's ears.

Food Poisoning Epidemic Feared by Health Official

By ROGER STONEBANKS

This warning was given the Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health Tuesday by its senior medical health officer, Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread.

The reason: The board is short five health inspectors and the provincial government has not provided funds to hire them, despite repeated requests.

An outbreak of food poisoning in Spokane, Washington, in 1966 resulted in two deaths, 29 persons treated in hospital and 102 others taken ill.

"There is a serious potential health hazard about the fact we are not able to inspect restaurants and grocery stores frequently," said Dr. Whitbread.

"We cannot accept responsibility and do not accept responsibility of this potential health hazard becoming a real health hazard."

Dr. Whitbread said staff shortages affect all programs, not just inspection of restaurants and food stores, and that the potential health hazard was not limited to the one area.

He said barbecued chickens sold in stores, subject of a current provincial study which does not include Victoria, could cause a serious food epidemic.

"It's critical," he said. "At any time the potential health hazard could change to an actual health hazard."

The health board has seven health inspectors, plus two supervisors who also do field work, and needs another five, plus two clerks, as well as a number of other staff, including a deputy medical health officer (the previous one left in September and no suitable replacement has been found) and seven nurses.

5 Inspectors 15 Years Ago

Fifteen years ago, the board heard, there were five health inspectors.

The last time the board heard from Health Minister Ralph Loffmark he said the request for more staff was "under study." That was April 24, 1969.

The board asked at its December meeting that staff vacancies be filled as soon as possible. It wrote Loffmark Dec. 18. No reply has yet been received.

To overcome the deficiency in provincially-paid staff, the board has had to assign employees paid by Victoria-Oak Bay-Esquimalt into neighboring municipalities.

City-paid health inspectors are being employed as far north as Royal Oak and Mount Douglas, beyond the urban area of Saanich municipality.

"If Victoria said its health inspectors were only to operate in Victoria we would be up the creek," said newly-elected health board chairman Mrs. Rubymay Parrott, of the Saanich Peninsula School Board.

"We were up the creek two years ago," replied Dr. Whitbread, who said the shortage of five health inspectors is in Saanich, Central Saanich, North Saanich and Sidney—the areas paid for by the provincial government.

Shocking Situation: Alderman

Two health inspectors said the shortage means inspections are on a minimal basis, insufficient for the population of Greater Victoria, that inspectors don't have time to check many restaurants and that one man is responsible for all the land from the Highland district west—including Langford, Colwood, Metchosin, Sooke, Jordan River and Port Renfrew.

"This is a shocking situation," commented Victoria Ald. Tom Christie. "It is ridiculous this has carried on so long. Victoria got services before with the Oak Bay-Esquimalt-Victoria arrangement and now this is not so."

Sidney Ald. Norma Sealey said the public is not receiving the protection to which it is entitled.

A report presented to the board said staff shortages have been referred to the provincial health minister in 1966, 1968 and 1969.

"During the past three years, sufficient inspections have not been made of restaurants and food establishments," the report said.

"Last year, one inspection of all these establishments was carried out. Deficiencies in operation were pointed out to the owners or operators.

"More frequent inspections, preferably every three months, and at a minimum once every six months, should be made on a routine basis to ensure satisfactory standards and operations being maintained."

The report said that existing staff is not able to supervise adequately all establishments on the basis suggested by Loffmark in 1968—making readjustments within the limitations of staff already employed.

Mrs. Parrott commented: "We can't accept responsibility for problems in this area if we don't have sufficient staff."

'Take Fight To Rights Commission'

The B.C. Government Employees' Union may go to the B.C. Human Rights Commission to contend the denial of bargaining rights is a denial of basic human rights.

Norman T. Richards, president of the BCGEU, said in Comox Tuesday night the withholding of bargaining rights is a form of disenfranchisement. The provincial government is excluding its employees from voting rights enjoyed by all other organized workers, he charged.

'VITAL' RIGHT

The BCGEU is campaigning to get full collective bargaining directly with the provincial government. At present they must deal with the civil service commission.

Richards said the denial of the right to deal directly with the employer over wages and working conditions was the denial of a "voting privilege" which is "just as vital a democratic right as the vote in a political sense."

MACHINE-GUN MISSING FROM HOME

The gun is a Lancaster 9 mm. with no serial number and is a collector's item.

Police say the firearm is an old navy boarding gun that has a hole drilled in the barrel making it inoperable but they feel it could be fixed to work again.

Deadbeat Claim 'Irrational'

Opposition leader David Barrett today called statements made by Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi "irrational" regarding the number of "deadbeats" on the welfare rolls.

Gaglardi said that deadbeats receiving social assistance were "falling like flies"

Barrett, the NDP leader, said he visited the Vancouver city social welfare single men's unit after hearing the statement. He said only one letter on one of 5,000 cases handled by the unit had been sent from the minister's office and after further review even this man was put back on the assistance role.

The opposition leader charged the minister's political career is "littered with the names of Social Cretit deadbeats he has used for political patronage". He added that Gaglardi was blustering in an effort to cover up "his complete inability to deal with human problems".

"When I say deadbeats, I mean those people who have jobs or an income and are getting money from the government as well," Gaglardi said in Vancouver.

"I'm not trying to hurt anybody," he said. "I'm trying to get more for the person who needs it."

No More Money Says Loffmark

His comment followed yet another plea Tuesday from the health board for additional funds to—overcome staff deficiencies.

"The solution to the problem hasn't changed," he said in a telephone interview from Vancouver.

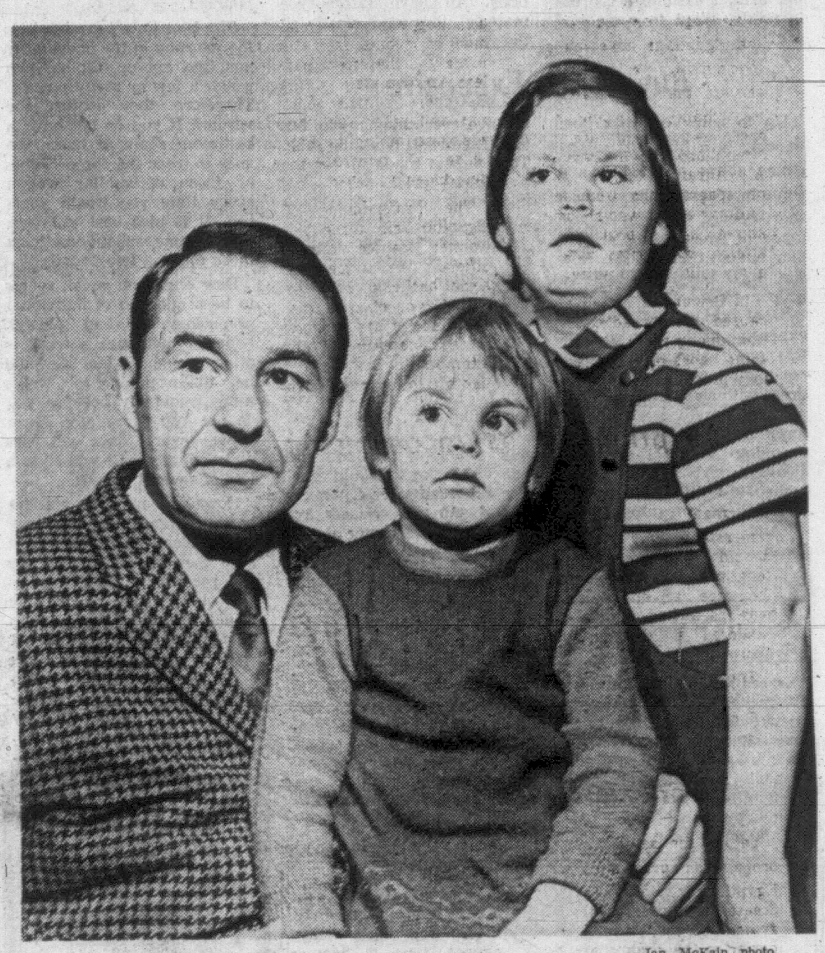

"The fact is and I don't blame the federal government that the federal and provincial governments can't see the upper limits of the cost of maintaining medicare and our hospital services.

"Until we see the upper limits of these costs we are going to have to hold all our medical and health costs somewhere near the existing level of service.

"Secondly. It should be clearly understood that no government can or will go on absorbing increased costs arising from wage demands which are not represented by corresponding increases in productivity.

"As the pattern of wage levels increases, there will be a consequential reduction in services and this applies not only to medical health units but to hospitals, home nursing care programs, grants to voluntary health agencies and so on." Asked if he was saying the answer is no, he replied: "Right." He also pointed out — but emphasized he is not suggesting this — that municipalities could spend less on, say, civic beautifucation, and more on health.

CHILDREN WITHOUT A MOTHER suffer a loss that money can't replace but a Vancouver judge said Tuesday the current law should be changed to make some provision for "love and devotion." Mr. Justice G. T. Gregory was making award to Miklos Kovats of Victoria, shown here with daughters Nora, 4, and Clara, 7. Mrs. Kovats was killed in a car crash.

Judge Can't Compensate for Love

The family life of Miklos Kovats has not been easy since his wife was killed in a local auto accident two years ago.

He has been trying to fulfil the role of both parents for his daughters, Nora, 4, and Clara, 7. But nothing can replace the loss of their mother, and this problem was underlined by Mr. Justice G. T. Gregory in Vancouver Tuesday.

In awarding damages in the accident case, the judge said the provincial law he had to apply should be changed.

He said there should be more consideration given to "things like love and devotion" in the Families Compensation Act, which as it stands made his task "unpleasant" in assessing damages to Kovats, 36, 1674 Warren Gardens.

He awarded Mr. Kovats total damages of $28,098, including $6,250 for damages to himself and two children, $19,427 under the act and special damages of $2,421.

The award was against Timothy John Ogilvie, of Victoria, driver of the other car involved in the accident, and Charles Clark Ogilvie, who admitted liability.

Mrs. Kovats was killed in a head-on collision on Craigflower near Skinner, Nov. 19, 1967.

Kovats, the two children, and Mr. Ogilvie, then residing at 1030 Fairfield, and his three passengers were all injured.

"Surely the time has come when another step forward would be taken and the courts empowered to make some allowance for the real loss which the surviving members of the family suffer when a loved one is killed by the wrongful act of another," Mr. Justice Gregory said.

Kovats is a forester with the provincial government. He hires a housekeeper from 3 to 8 p.m. daily and this is part of the financial burden.

The widower was one of the first groups of Hungarians to immigrate to Canada at the time of the revolution. The entire forestry faculty of his university came to UBC and he subsequently graduated there.

Arthur Mayse...

MAN PROPOSES BUT life disposes, as a settled business lady of middle years once surprised me by observing in the course of a cocktail party conversation.

Her point, which she explained before our little group was absorbed by a larger and noisier one, was that the work we do and the lives we lead aren't likely to be those we once planned for ourselves.

This called for a question. What had she planned for herself?

"I firmly intended to become a spy," said this well-ordered matron, just before we were descended upon.

I hoped to learn more about an ambition that got lost in the shuffle ... and maybe just as well. But the opportunity didn't offer, and I can only wonder how effective she might have been in the risky career that never materialized.

There are, of course, those of us who do make good our early intentions. I suspect, though, that men and women who actually follow through on hope or daydream are hard to find.

Yet, even though I wouldn't trade the hand life has dealt me for any other, once in a long time, a cheated inner presence still makes itself heard.

'Hey,' it protests. 'You crossed me up!'

This is nonsense, and we both know it. I would have made a lousy commercial fisherman, and I abandoned that notion before I had managed to spring myself from high school.

But I still reach for the family binoculars when some tall-poled troller passes on the straits, and watch her out of sight.

There's no harm, and possibly a certain amount of good, in keeping an outgrown dream in storage.

After all, it costs nothing, and can be indulged without the hard work, danger and disappointment that the achieved reality might impose.

It isn't necessary for the thwarted lady spy at the party to consider that she might have blown her first assignment, or been pushed off a subway platform.

For years, it never occurred to me that the wife who is kind enough not to remind me that I would probably hang my inagined troller on a reef might be entertaining a never-never notion of her own.

Then one day she told me that she has not one but two daydreams, and is unable to choose between them.

"Sometimes I'm an archeologist," she said. "I'm down in a trench that everyone else on the expedition has abandoned, and I'm working patiently with a whisk and a little digging tool of some kind. Usually I see it as a nail file. Then I make a discovery. It varies with the location, but it's going to upset all existing theories."

We were toasting cheese sandwiches at the time, comfortably far from that sun-smitten trench with its flies, scorpions, and for all I know, lurking vipers. Even so, I didn't much like the sound of it, and asked her about the other role.

"Well," she said, "I've never considered this seriously. But I like to make people laugh, and you know how fond I am of clowns."

"You mean circus clowns?" I asked.

"Circus, parade, it doesn't matter," she said. "Just so I could wear one of those baggy costumes with the frills and polka dots, and a big nose and flappy feet."

She laid our sandwiches on bread plates and cut them in half. "Of course, I just see the one side of the picture," Win said. "Being a working clown mightn't be all that much fun."

Selfishly, I hope this won't happen in her case, but often enough to prove that they exist, I run into people who have boomeranged back to an early plan for living, and translated it into fact.

I know a writer who did just that.

He kept his hope warm all through his teens, but never got around to testing it. Instead, he put in for a civil service job, and worked his way up to a pretty good rating in his department.

For years, he insists, the idea of writing for a living never troubled his thoughts. Then one day, the long-dormant itch came back. In middle age, he decided that somehow, anyhow, he was going to beat a family's needs out of a typewriter.

He was doing so when last we met. On his bad days, he told me, then, another dream occasionally creeps out of hiding.

In it, he's back in the civil service, up to his ears in the old routine, and drawing a regular pay-cheque!

Swinging Partners Lose Some Pounds

By PENNY SAVER

"I've never appreciated square dancing," said Gladys. "All that leaping and jumping and honoring your partner struck me as being . . . well, overdone. That is, I never appreciated square dancing until Vera came to live next door."

"Vera has turned you into the whirling dervish of the wild west?"

"No, but Vera has shown me a use for square dancing. She and her husband started taking square dance classes as part of a diet program, and it worked."

"I didn't think square dancing was that strenuous."

"It isn't, but an allamande is better than cake in the hand. While dancing they weren't eating, or thinking about eating, so they stayed on their diets.

"Besides, Joel promised to buy Vera a proper square dancing dress as soon as she reached her proper weight. She just arrived back home and from the bundles under her arm, I assume her dress is ready. Want to come and see?"

Buys Most Expensive

Up to now Vera has been dancing in a full skirt square dance skirts are $11.98 and come in several colors) and a short-sleeved peasant blouse made of white cotton with a lacy cut-out trim ($9.98). Now she has bought herself a proper dress.

"Joel said to get the most expensive in the shop so I got this one," she said shaking out a mint green dream of a dress with short sleeves.

Broad stretches of silver lurex braid fringed the full swinging skirt and the sleeves, and trimmed the bodice. Gladys and I gasped with delight.

"And it fitted," giggled Vera. "I'm so used to having to have everything made, but this fitted right from the rack. That almost made up for the scandalous price—$69.98. It's imported from Arizona—square dance country."

The first thing Vera flounced out of a box swept me up in a wave of nostalgia—a crinoline with yards of ruffled nylon net in a color to match her dress and trimmed with lurex braid.

"They have to be made specially," she told us, "because crinolines are not in style. The plainest could cost $9.98 while the top price is $19.98. There are many colors of net available both in solid colors and rainbow combinations. All have taffeta-type material tops and elastic at the waist."

Other dresses, she told us are made to order from $20 on up depending on trim, style and material.

"It was so good of Joel to buy me these," said Vera as she put the dress away. "And since he's lost as much weight as I, I felt he deserved something too . . ."

In tomorrow's column I'll tell what Vera bought Joel. For where to buy the items in this column, please call 382-3131 between 9 a.m. and 12 noon.

Weighing Too Often Is Discouraging

By JOSEPHINE LOWMAN

It will not be long now before the glamorous season spring, arrives. That is the time of bursting blossoms, spring showers, gentle sunshine and new clothes. I do not believe there is any time of the year when women wish so fervently to be lovely, perhaps because nature is doing such a beautiful and complete makeover job on herself.

Don't meet this season with the birds singing and the zippers springing. There is time to lose any overweight you have so that you can enjoy the charming colorful clothes. Thousands of women are doing just that. This is the eighth installment of my Eight Week Beauty Improvement Plan which helps you reach your goal in time.

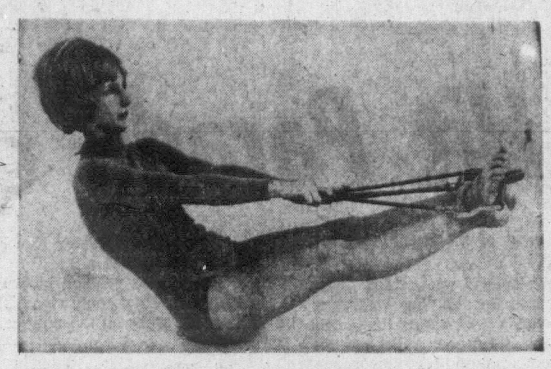

Those of you who are following this course have weighed and measured yourselves, heard a lot about exercise and planning reducing menus, and should be well on your way. I have also given you seven exercises and menus for seven days. Today, I would like to talk about when and how often you should weigh and how frequently you should measure yourself.

The best time to weigh is in the morning in the nude, when you first get up. Clothes can weigh a few or many pounds. Therefore, they confuse the verdict. If you do not have a bathroom scale at home, be sure to wear the same clothes or those of similar weight every time you wiegh yourself. It is also best to weigh on the same scale. Sometimes these differ a few pounds.

How often you weigh seems to be a question of individual psychology. I had always believed that once a week is often enough. I feel it would be discouraging to weigh more frequently bceause you do not lose every day. More usual, several days will pass and then the scale will show a loss of several pounds.

However, many readers have written to say that they were never able to lose weight until they weighed every day and recorded it on a day by day chart. They needed the visual impact to keep at it. This is probably a good idea if you do not expect to lose every day. It has its advantages. This way it is impossible for a gain of any importance to slip up on you.

Measure every two weeks.

This is hip slimming. Sit on the floor and place your feet in the loops at the ends of an elastic rope. Grasp the centre of the rope with your hands and pull back as you raise your trunk and your legs from the floor. Rock back and forth. Your body weight is balanced on your buttocks.

If you are so curious you cannot wait and your clothes feel a bit looser, then measure before that. However, except when you are on a crash diet and losing very rapidly, it takes longer than a week for much difference in measurements to show.

MENUS

BREAKFAST

Total calories for the day — 1196.

If you want to lose from 15 to 20 pounds in the next eight weeks or improve your appearance generally, but missed the first part of this series, it is not too late to begin. My BIP Kit gives you a booklet with complete directions and a unique wall chart on which you can plot your daily weight and see your beauty line rise as your weight line drops. If any of you readers would like to have this kit, send 25 cents, plus 15 cents for postage and handling and your printed name and address to Josephine Lowman in care of this newspaper.

Return Ticket Won't Be Needed

BARRIE, Ont. (CP) — A Japanese bride arrived in Canada recently armed with a return ticket to Japan in case she didn't like the prospective bridegroom. She married him a week later.

Reiko Kimura of Tokyo met her husband-to-be for the first time at the Toronto airport after a brief mail courtship arranged by their families.

Her bridegroom, Kenji Niwa, 29, came from Nagoya, Japan, about 18 months ago. He decided the time was right to marry, so he wrote to his family and asked them to choose a suitable bride for him.

His family had friends whose daughter was of marriageable age. The two young people exchanged a few letters and photographs, and a month later Reiko flew to Canada.

She says she wanted to see what she thought of Canada and Kenji.

"I had a return ticket in case I didn't like him."

The bride borrowed a traditional kimono, sash and sandals from her aunt, who lives in Preston, Ont.

She says it is customary for marriages to be arranged in Japan, though nowadays the prospective bride and groom can make their own final decisions.

Reiko says her family had been trying to arrange a marriage for her for years, but she wasn't interested.

Sibling Rivalry Still a Puzzle For Psychiatrists

By DOROTHY RICH

WASHINGTON — Brothers and sisters have that disconcerting way of not doing equally well in school. And that faithful family retainer, sibling rivalry, is right there to get in on everything, including school achievement.

Folk wisdom usually has it that two sisters are the worst in sibling rivalry. Modern psychiatry has found that an older sister followed by a brother tends to be even more intense. Maybe the girls are just noisier about theirs.

Folk wisdom also has it that in a large family there is less sibling rivalry. Not necessarily true, say psychiatrists. It's just usually less obvious. Looking close, you'd see that the children closest in age have a rivalry going.

Despite modern studies and psychiatrists galore, there are no easy answers to this ages-old problem.

The usual psychiatric answers are so vague they tend to offer little practical help for besieged parents. My recent discussion with psychiatrist Dr. Edward Sheridan may offer some helpful pointers:

Q. Do comparisons help or hinder?

A. This is a problem for teachers as well as parents. Adults are tempted to spur on children with tales of how well a sibling did last year, for example, "Charley was able to do it—so can you." Too often, however, this approach backfires.

Comparisons don't really help. They tend to intensify the hostility between children. Kids will compare themselves on their own. Adults shouldn't add to it.

Q. What's a parent to say when one youngster brings home all A's and another brings home C's?

Reports are Private

A. Don't devalue the achievements of the A-bringer to spare the feelings of the other child, but don't turn the report cards into family-type discussions. Report cards are private matters and should not be discussed around the dining table. Parents should talk with each child individually. Discussing grades over dinner is like giving out rations of love along with potatoes.

In the private talk with the C-bringer, look for and talk about all the positive things he can do well. Both parents and children need help in identifying these abilities and to avoid labelling a child as a failure because his grades, this time, were low.

Q. What about rewards, even money, for grades? Do tangible rewards spur achievement?

A. No easy answer at all here. It all depends on the individual. For some children, it may be helpful at some points in their lives, For others, no.

The big, general answer here is that parents have to start early, in the nursery years and before, to reward through recognition the child's own joy in learning. Those finger paintings may look a mess, but they are important for the child's own sense of achievement. The same goes for the child's first steps in numbers, colors and letters.

While dimes and toys may be helpful in the short run, it is the individual's delight in his own achievements that will be his reward system all through life.

Q. What's in back of this sibling friction, particularly as it affects schoolwork?

A. An elder child needs time and a chance to work out his feelings of dispossession by a younger sibling. When this older child goes off to school before he's had this chance to test his feeling and master his new, independent role, he may have troubles in school. Some of these children get a sense of guilt for doing well, for excelling over their sibling.

Parents can help children get over this problem by encouraging children to express their real feelings. A child has to be self-centred, to say "no," to feel anger, before he can be altruistic with his sibling.

Q. Is there any ideal age difference between children to reduce sibling rivalry?

A. No. But it is true that the younger the child the more vulnerable he is to sibling rivalry feelings. Signs may just not be as obvious. A baby may catch more colds while an older child will throw a tantrum.

JAYCEE-ETTES CELEBRATE JAYCEE WEEK

A display on the Emily Carr Foundation was the focus of interest when wives of local mayors, aldermen and businessmen gathered Tuesday at a punch party to mark Jaycee Week. The party was held by the Victoria Jaycee-Ettes to acquaint women in the community with the work of the local Jaycees, including their work for the Emily Carr Foundation. Shown chatting with Mrs. Courtney Haddock, second from right, wife of the Victoria mayor, are, from left, Mrs. John Devlin, party convener and past Jaycee-Ettes president; Mrs. Stan Wallis, Jaycee president's wife, and Mrs. George Robbins, president of the Jaycee-Ettes. Homemakers and Group Sessions Help Edmonton's Low Income Group

EDMONTON (CP) — Mental depression is one of the biggest hurdles for those who live on basic or inadequate incomes.

One mother of six—four of whom are pre-schoolers—now is managing on welfare, but considers herself lucky because she gets out a little.

She credits a homemaker from the Edmonton social service department who helped her overcome her depression and learn to budget.

To begin with, she was so depressed that "I was really down on the kids."

"Everything they did was wrong. Later I realized that it wasn't the kids at all."

This mother of six attends group discussions run by the city's social service department under social worker Phyllis Jones. Mrs. Jones has six homemakers who go out to homes that need assistance.

The three areas where families have the most problems are budgeting, child care and family relationships, she says.

Frances Cullan, home economist for the department, says one problem is that people on welfare can't afford to buy in quantity. Only the affluent can save enough to buy large enough quantities that will result in savings.

Adequate storage and lack of transportation are other problems for the low-income family.

The mother mentioned above considers herself lucky because her brother-in-law usually drives her to her shopping. Her 11-year-old daughter baby-sits. The store is about eight blocks away, and the drive saves her bus or cab fare.

This woman also considers herself lucky that her brother-in-law often takes her out on Saturday night to a show. Welfare money just doesn't stretch that far.

"Now we have enough to eat and the children are healthy," she says, praising what she has learned in her group sessions.

And the family has one luxury —a television set. With the help of the homemaker, the woman worked out a budget whereby she could purchase it on a rental plan for $14 a month over a one-year period.

She finds that it really helps to occupy the children's time and keep them from becoming depressed.

Total of $8,000 Donated to Hospital

The Ladies' Auxiliary to St. Joseph's Hospital donated a total of $8,000 to the hospital in 1969, it was announced at the annual meeting Tuesday.

President Mrs. A. A. Cownden said in the annual report that the funds had gone toward beds, progressive care and maternity equipment.

Mrs. Cownden was unopposed in her re-election for her second term of office.

Other officers acclaimed for the 1970 term were: Mrs. A. D. Blair and Mrs. Ian Douglas, vice-presidents; Mrs. J. G. Tischart, secretary; Mrs. A. H. Marriott; treasurer; Mrs. G. R. McKenzie, Mrs. C. L. Hortie and Mrs. T. G. Pye, councillors.

Mrs. Cownden on behalf of the auxiliary, presented the hospital's executive director, Dr. E. G. Q. Van Tilburg, with a cheque for $5,000. Part of that sum, $2,600, will go toward purchase of an addition to a scanning machine.

Money for the various donations was raised through the annual bazaar, the mobile hospital store, bridge luncheon, coffee party and other projects.

Dr. Van Tilburg praised the auxiliary for its work as a fund-raising organization and for its devotion to making patients' stay in hospital more comfortable.

In other business, Mrs. Cownden pointed out that the auxiliary took over direction of the library cart in 1969.

The annual report included summaries from Mrs. C. A. Macgillivray, membership Margaret Beesley, sick committee; Eileen Atkinson, phoning committee; Dorothy O'Neil, baby cart; Mrs. A. J. Shipley and Mrs. L. Barraud, mobile stores; Mrs. Frank Stuart, publicity; Mrs. Ian Douglas, secretary's report; and Mrs. A. H. Mariott, treasurer's report.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Mom Disapproves

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I could always figure out my own problems, but since we seem to be living in a different world from our children, I have come to the point where I can use some help.

My daughter is 22. She has a boy friend who is going to college in another town. It's his last year, and he lives close enough so he could drive home on weekends if he wanted to. He used to, but lately he hasn't so my daughter thinks it is all right for her to drive down to visit him every weekend.

Maybe I'm old-fashioned. She talks about getting married next year, and they aren't even engaged. I don't like to see her running after him. I think she is cheapening herself. I love my daughter, and I trust her, but this difference of opinion is driving us apart. What do you think? — Loving Mom.

DEAR MOM: There are two schools of thought. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder." (Yours.) and, "Out of sight, out of mind." (Hers.) Knowing nothing about the relationship between your daughter and the young man, I hesitate to recommend one school over the other, but I'd be inclined to tell her to idle down her engine, and let him burn up the highways for a change.

DEAR ABBY: I have a mother who listens in on the other telephone when my sister is talking to her boy friend. I don't go by the downstairs phone to catch her at it, but I have walked by where the phone is, and there sits Mom listening in for all she is worth.

I don't think this is a very nice thing for my mother to do, but then you don't go telling your mother what to do especially when you are a 12-year-old boy and she is a 42-year-old lady. So hurry your advice. I was thinking maybe I should tell my sister. —A Boy in Newark.

DEAR BOY: That would be a very brotherly thing to do.

DEAR ABBY: When my sister, Leona, was married, my parents gave her and her husband, Ross, many lovely pieces of furniture as a wedding gift. Leona died quite suddenly, one year after her marriage and Ross put the furniture in storage and moved into a smaller apartment. That was two years ago.

Now my brother is getting married, and my parents have told me that they intend to ask Ross for the furniture so they can give it to my brother and his fiancee as they feel it should be kept in "our" family. Ross is also considering marriage in the near future.

Abby, I wasn't asked for my opinion. My parents simply told me of their intentions. I personally feel that my parents are out of line to ask Ross for the furniture. I believe that Leona would have wanted Ross to keep whatever they shared. I also believe that my brother and his wife would feel uncomfortable keeping the furniture. Should I speak my mind? Or should I keep my mouth shut? — Still Water.

DEAR STILL WATER: Speak your mind. I agree with you.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks a lot for not agreeing with that reader who was all for getting middle-aged men out of the bedroom and into fishing boots.

Our streams are already crowded enough as it is without filling them with more frustrated fly-flingers. Bob Peel as Rod Hunter.

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to ABBY, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply enclose stamped, addressed envelope.

Science Association Elects First Woman President

BOSTON, Mass. (AP) — "Because it was fun," Mina Rees became a mathematician.

And she has enjoyed it enough to carve out an illustrious career that now is making her the first woman president of the largest American scientific society—the 122,000-member American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Dr. Rees helped to develop high-speed computers, but herself is the antithesis of cold electronic calculators, no computer with curls. Totally feminine, warm, vivacious, she has dark blonde curls and possesses, says another scientist, "a very sharp mind and a highly organized one."

In the voting by mail for the presidency of the AAAS, Dr. Rees to her surprise won over another mathematician, Dr. Mark Kac, of Rockefeller University, N.Y. She never expected to be elected and tried to hide the fact she had even been nominated from her husband, Dr. Leopold Brahdy, a physician. She didn't succeed—he was getting mail from the AAAS in his own name.

Dr. Rees, 67, is president of the graduate division of the City University of New York, a post she has held since serving as dean of Hunter College in New York from 1953 to 1961.

She now is president-elect of the AAAS and will take over as president Jan. 15, 1971, succeeding Dr. Athelstan Spilhaus, an oceanographer of Palm Beach, Fla.

Dr. Rees says one of her great concerns is in helping people acquire the information that they need to make decisions—as they must in a democracy—as to what science and technology should be doing, where they should be going.

Born in Cleveland in 1902, Dr. Rees was reared in New York City, received her bachelor's degree from Hunter College in 1923, her master's degree from Columbia in 1925, and her PhD from the University of Chicago in 1931.

Mathematics was her first love from the beginning, she says. But for one year she attended law school at New York University, dreaming, perhaps, of becoming a judge. But she went back to mathematics when, she says, she found she would "have to work with lawyers all the time."

She finds mathematicians to be "human beings with many interests outside mathematics," and her own include oil painting, concerts, bird watching, travel and cooking.

She is the only mathematician in the family—her father was an insurance agent and three brothers and a sister are in business.

U.S. Space Program Spending Sees Widespread Cutbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — After enjoying lavish funds in the 1960s for its exotic forays into space, the U.S. space agency is beginning the 1970s with a purse drawn so tight it can barely stay aloft.

It won the race with the Russians to reach the moon, and now it is losing out to the national needs of the '70s.

Its already shrunken work force is being cut by 50,000 people. Other curtailments may signal an indefinite delay in sending men to Mars and a slowdown by at least a year in the next big space moves—building a space shuttle and advanced earth stations.

To save money, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration will stretch out its moon landing flights to two a year for the seven flights remaining, skipping 1972 entirely. It will postpone a planned unmanned landing on Mars by at least two years and order no more Saturn V rockets beyond the eight being built or nearing completion.

Administrator Thomas O. Paine announced the cuts Tuesday, saying he is "taking actions to redirect portions of our space program to bring NASA's total operations in line with the budget which we will work within fiscal 1971."

He did not say how much space agency money President Nixon will request when he submits his budget Jan. 27, but it was obvious the figure will be no more than $3,700,000,000—the lowest in a decade. The total may even go below $3,500,000,000.

With three moon flights in the current fiscal year, NASA's spending will be about $3,600,000,000, down from a high of $5,250,000,000 in 1965.

The number working in NASA programs will decline from 190,000 at the end of fiscal year 1970 to about 140,000 at the end of fiscal year 1971, Paine said.

At the peak, in 1966, the figure was 420,000.

Last September, while the country still was flushed with the success of the Apollo 11 first landing on the moon, President Nixon received recommendations from his group on space goals.

It listed three choices, all incorporating development of the space shuttle—an airplane-like craft able to fly into space and return repeatedly—and the advanced space station, to house 100 persons. Two of the options envisaged landing men on Mars in the 1980s. The third left the timetable open.

It was known the president favored a progressive program and the announcement was expected about Christmas.

EAR TO PEOPLE

But following passage of the tax reform bill the president took soundings of the mood of the people, White House sources say, and apparently found, going to the moon for more rocks was not of high priority. As a result, there is still a chance he may cut off some moon flights.

Paine said the president may not announce space goals until late winter or early spring—probably to give the White House time for more pulse taking.

Paine indicated the new budget would provide some money for design studies for both the space shuttle and space station. It will cost about $8,000,000,000 to develop a space shuttle—necessary to transport men and supplies to space stations.

Paine said the 1971 space program "although austere, is forward looking and contains the basic ingredients needed for an effective space program in the 1970s."

'Satanic' Poet To Read

Stanley Cooperman has been described as satanic, and critics consider his poetry to be among the best on the contemporary American circuit.

Cooperman will read his works at the University of Victoria at 8 o'clock tonight in room 168, Elliott Building.

Currently teaching English at Simon Fraser University, Cooperman has published four books of verse. Among the best known are the Day of the Parrott and the Owl behind the Door.

Cooperman was born in New York in 1929 and took his B.A. at New York University in 1951. He has worked as a newspaperman and has taught in Iran on the Fulbright lectureship.

Social Ills 'Major Bond' For Church

CALGARY (CP) — Rt. Rev. George Frederick Clarence Jackson, 61, of Regina was installed Tuesday night as archbishop of the Anglican province of Rupert's Land.

Bishop Jackson, elected earlier Tuesday, said laymen would have to become more involved in the church if it was going to meet the rapidly changing needs of the world.

This uncertainty among laymen will probably slow moves toward union with other churches and could even lead to scrapping of plans, he said.

Social problems are becoming a major bond between churches in Christianity, he said.

Bishops from across the Prairies met to elect Bishop Jackson, who will head an ecclesiastical district which includes Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and parts of Ontario and the Northwest Territories.

Bishop Jackson, former dean of St. Paul's pro-cathedral in Regina and Bishop of Qu'Appelle since 1960, succeeds Most Rev. Howard Clark, Anglican Primate for Canada.

Rest Home Fire Hearing Told Owner Unlicensed

By GUY BAILLARGEON

NOTRE-DAME-DU-LAC, Que. (CP) — A labor department inspector testified Tuesday that the owner of an old-folks home where 38 persons died in a fire Dec. 2 did not have a permit to care for crippled patients.

Jean-Louis Anderson, 53, the inspector, told a combined coroner and fire commissioner's inquiry that Charles-Eugene Tardif had a licence to look after only three persons who could walk by themselves.

Mr. Tardif, 57, was the owner of Repos du Vieillard, a three-storey wooden house which crumbled into charred ruins in hours. He said his establishment had 64 pensioners who paid $125 a month to live there.

Mr. Anderson told Commissioner Cyrile Delage he had visited the home twice and that Mr. Tardif always met the department's orders and requirements "to the letter."

"My orders were always respected," the inspector said, "but I never knew that the home admitted chronically-ill persons."

Mr. Delage retorted:

'If it is the labor department which issues permits to house old people who are able to walk, isn't it also its role to ensure that there are no cripples there?"

WELL FLAMES SEAR OFFSHORE OIL RIG

SABINE PASS, Tex. (UPI) — An offshore oil well blew out Tuesday 15 miles south of the Texas-Louisiana border, sending flames rushing across an 180-foot-long mobile oil rig. One of 27 drillers on board was killed and four others were injured.

The coast guard said all on board the dark grey rig were accounted for. Most of the men were rescued from the rig by nearby fishing boats, and then transferred to Coast Guard cutters or helicopters which had rushed from Sabine Pass — the nearest port.

Fire raged on the rig for more than three hours after the blowout.

Foreign Control in Canada 'Alarming'

OTTAWA (CP) — Foreign control of the Canadian economy now has reached alarming proportions and continues virtually unimpeded, New Democrat Leader T. C. Douglas said Tuesday.

"As a result, Canada's options for the future are being increasingly closed off," Mr. Douglas said as the Commons debated amendments to the Canada Corporations Act.

Conservative House Leader Gerald Baldwin said the proposed amendments would allow the government to intimidate and harass business for political purposes.

Under the bill, all federally-incorporated firms with assets or annual income of $3,000,000 or more would be required to disclose their finances in annual statements.

New loan, trust and insurance companies also would be incorporated under letters patent from the government rather than by special acts of Parliament.

SCORES LOAN FIRMS

Arnold Peters (NDP—Timiskaming) said a licence to operate a consumer loan company in Canada "is like a licence to print money. He cautioned the government against granting such licences to foreign concerns.

Mr. Douglas said foreign control over the Canadian economy had alarmed the former Pearson government and prompted a royal commission investigation.

Yet none of the commission's recommendations had been implemented and the government had made no statement about what it intends.

Meanwhile, the situation worsened.

The commission had reported in 1963 that two-thirds of the Canadian economy was under foreign control. Since then the government had admitted that another 606 corporations under federal control had been bought out by outside corporat ons.

"This is to say nothing of the hundreds of companies coming under provincial jurisdiction which have also been bought out," Mr. Douglas said.

Mr. Baldwin said that MPs should not assume that because a person is in busines, he should be condemned automatically and subjected to unwarranted and unjustified investigation and interference.

SHOULD BE EVIDENCE

"That should not be permitted unless a prima facie case can be made," he said.

A significant characteristic of the Trudeau government "is that it seeks to take unto itself powers which should be exercised by bodies such as the courts which have an independence of government."

Eldon Woolliams (PC—Calgary North) said he is tired of hearing Canadians talk about American investment as evil. Without it, Western Canada's petroleum industry would be in trouble.

Clifford Downey (PC—Battle River) said Canadians should stop treating large corporations as whipping boys. But more government control was needed over them.

Rod Thomson (NDP—Battleford-Kindersley) said the bill should insist on better management by Canadians of their businesses.

ONTARIO ONLY PROVINCE CONCERNED

Tire Studs Shorten Road Life

By BOB PARKINS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Studded tires, blamed in Ontario for cutting the normal life span of highways by up to 75 per cent, are causing little concern elsewhere in Canada.

Except for Quebec, where the government is still studying the problem, provincial highways departments say no restrictive legislation is planned.

A Cross-Canada Survey by The Canadian Press found that highways spokesmen outside heavily-populated areas feel low traffic volumes solve the problem for them.

In Ontario, however, the department of highways estimates studded tires may do $127,000,000 worth of damage to 8,000 miles of highways and roads in the south in the next nine years.

The department says studs—mounted with a pneumatic gun which rivets them firmly into the tires—can cut the life span of an average stretch of highway to little more than three years from 12 to 14 years.

Only about 35 per cent of Ontario vehicles are equipped with studs, but the department expects the figure to rise to 60 per cent by 1971-72 and remain there. Studs are legal in Ontario from Oct. 1 to April 30.

RESEARCH CONTINUING

While the department continues to do research on the problem, Edward N. Barrie, a department engineer, says Ottawa's Queensway expressway will have to be resurfaced 15 years earlier because of studs.

He says surface loss from studs on the thoroughfare is a quarter inch during the winter. The department allows one-inch maximum wear before resurfacing.

In Quebec, Jacques Charland, research director for the roads department, says a study begun last winter is still comparing public cost with safety.

There will be no decision this year, Mr. Charland says, but research so far indicates that while studs are useful on sheer ice they may not perform much better than ordinary tires on sand-covered ice.

Samples show 55 per cent of Quebec vehicles with studs this year compared with 47 per cent last year.

Elsewhere, officials say there is virtually no problem.

Newfoundland Highways Minister Harold Starkes says no consideration has been given to banning studs, legal from Nov. 15 to April 15, because traffic volume is not heavy enough to do extensive damage.

NO STUDIES PLANNED

New Brunswick allows studs at any time of year, plans no studies on the extent of the damage they do and, says Deputy Highways Minister R. H. Sweet, finds low traffic volumes mean they present little problem.

In Halifax, a Nova Scotia highways engineer said his department has not found that studs, permitted Oct. 15 to April 15, cause significant damage.

Prince Edward Island has not been able to link studded tires with highway damage. But, a spokesman said, the province's policy is being studied. Studs can be used from Nov. 1 to April 30.

Joe Borowski, transportation minister in Manitoba where studs are legal from Oct. 1 to April 30, says no further restrictions are planned. More research into road construction may be needed, Mr. Borowski suggests.

An Alberta highways spokesman said his department is studying damage rates but has had no indications of serious harm to roads. Like Mr. Borowski, he said the safety gained through stud use outweighs damage to highways although regulations might be considered —Alberta does not restrict use to winter.

Saskatchewan reported no problems with studs and British Columbia, where they are allowed from October through April, is asking highways department engineers around the province to watch for signs of road damage.

For 15 Years Border Sprayed ... But Then a Senator Spoke

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tiny agency that has worked for years in obscurity trying to keep the Canadian border clear of weeds and heavy undergrowth has found itself part of the growing controversy over environmental control.

For 15 years, the International Joint Commission routinely used chemicals to help clear sections of the border.

Then, last October, Senator Gaylord Nelson (Dem. Wis.) wrote the state department to question the practice of using a chemical he said also is a defoliant in Vietnam.

In his letter, Nelson said 800 to 1,000 miles along the border had been sprayed, and although the chemical would not directly harm fish and wildlife, there is an intrusion into the balance of nature.

All of the sudden, conservationists and other critics discovered the commission—phone and mail business for the six people in the office has been brisk.

WANTS INQUIRY

In Vermont, where a commission spokesman said no problems were encountered last summer in getting landowners' permission to work the border, a legislator wants a state investigation.

Marie Sheehy, administrative officer for the commission, said from 250 to 300 persons have phoned or written to complain but "about 99 per cent of them are conservationists who have not even been to the border to see what we are doing."

Conservationists are jumping to erroneous conclusions on some misinformation circulated about the scope of the project, she said.

Tordon 101, commonly called picloram, is used by the commission on 2.47 square miles in the United States, she added.

Mrs. Sheehy said the chemical is similar to that used as a defoliant "by utility, highway, nursery and agriculture departments in nearly every state."

HARMLESS TO GRASS

The mixture of the chemical used by the commission is "suited to the conditions along the border and doesn't kill the berry bushes or grass," she said.

The 20-foot strip along the border—half of it on the Canadian side—"is not a demilitarized zone, it is becoming more parklike because the growth is so low."

"Since the 1925 treaty, we've been maintaining the entire boundary—5,526 miles—and we spray only the extremely wooded areas. We've used department of agriculture-approved chemicals that are widely used commercially for control of undesirable growth.

"We have always taken all precautions—we haven't had one legitimate complaint in 15 years."

'Law is Law' Says Turner On Marijuana

OTTAWA — The "law is the law". It makes marijuana illegal in Canada and it will be enforced, Justice Minister John Turner told the Commons Monday.

The minister made this clear in the House during opposition questioning about the government's attitude towards the use of "pot" or marijuana in Canada.

The questions arose as a result of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's reported remarks to a Paris newspaper reporter. In the interview he told the lady reporter that if "pot" turned out to me no more harmful to health than tobacco then "it might not be a bad idea" to legalize its use.

The health and welfare department has a special commission enquiring into the use of narcotics in Canada.

A preliminary report of the commission will be available late in February, health and welfare minister John Munro said.

32 KILLED IN SAMOA PLANE CRASH

APIA, Samoa (Reuters) — A Polynesian Airlines DC-3 crashed into a lagoon and exploded into flames shortly after taking off from Faleolo Ariport here Tuesday, killing all 29 passengers and three crew.

Apart from the two New Zealand pilots, all those killed were Samoans—including a party of 28 from the Grey Lawn Congregational Church, Auckland, returning to New Zealand from a Christmas visit to their homeland.

Four of the dead were children.

Eyewitnesses said the airliner dipped into a sharp left turn as it gained altitude after taking off from Pago Pago, American Samoa. An explosion ripped the fuselage apart as the plane nosedived into the lagoon only 100 yards from shore and half a mile from the runway.

HOME GARDEN

Some Useful Information on Seeds

By HILDA BEASTALL

Longevity of seed is a fascinating subject for the home gardener wanting to get the best value from seeds he buys. We use the word a little erroneously perhaps, to indicate the lifespan of seed, or in other words, the extent of time during which seed of a given kind will germinate.

Hilda

Vegetables show a wide range of years for their seeds to be kept and still be good for sowing.

A gardener would benefit in several ways from knowing something about this. He would sow his seed more thinly knowing that what is left would be good for another two or three years.

He would also save a little money from this practise; and he would certainly save himself disappointment in the failure of seed to germinate when he has kept it too long.

Seed with a high viability is sold by reputable seedsmen and dealers, but from the moment of sale their only responsibility is for the price of the seed, since everything that happens to it from the moment of purchase is dependent on the purchaser.

Keep seed in a cool dark place as nearly between 45 and 55 deg. F. as possible. A bottom drawer or cupboard with an outside wall, far removed from a heat source is suggested. No need to add the place should be quite dry too.

Usually good for only the year of purchase are onions, parsley and parsnips. Sometimes a few will germinate the following spring but not sufficient to get a two-year rating.

Listed as being viable for two years are leek seeds, sweet peppers, watermelon and globe artichokes.

Many of the most widely grown vegetables are found in the list for three-year keeping. Here we have asparagus, beans, broccoli, carrots, celery, kohlrabi, peas, spinach and sweet corn.

Remaining viable four years are beets, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, cauliflower, Swiss chard, eggplant, kale, pumpkin, radish, squash, tomato and turnip.

Cucumber will still germinate after five years, while lettuce has still been viable at six and seven years.

These tables are useful, but the gardener can only get full benefit if he knows how long he has had his seeds.

Make a habit of marking each seed packet with year of purchase and longevity, or viability; thus carrots—1970—3 years. Those marked for one year will be doubtful starters the following year so don't rely entirely on old seed.

Each year before ordering, or purchasing, new seed, discard those which have expired, and don't be afraid of ordering more than you need of a kind which, with careful storage, will still be good after three or four years.

Remarkable Things About Teeth Told

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

I have just been reading an astounding book telling all sorts of remarkable things about teeth, both today and in ancient Egypt. The book was written by Dr. Sydney Garfield of Beverly Hills, Calif., and is the result of his enormous amount of research through libraries, laboratories, museums and even aquariums and zoos. He tells of both ancient and modern dentistry. As the doctor says so truly, this is the first book of its kind ever written.

In writing it, Dr. Garfield's idea was to do away with a number of the fears that afflict people about their teeth, and which often kept them from going to their dentist when they need him. In order to write this book, Dr. Garfield consulted scientists all around the world, and visited many authorities and specialists.

The book has many remarkable illustrations. He wrote the book not only for dentists and their assitants, but for men, women and children everywhere, as well as for medical doctors and nurses, and students in several fields of endeavor.

To illustrate what this book is like, I happened to open to a place where I found much about what happened to teeth years ago when men fought in the prize ring bare-fisted.

Dr. Garfield is a man after my own heart in that he loves to study everything that can be learned about every phase of a subject that interests him.

For years many doctors have had a hunch that chocolate was bad for youngsters with acne, but now I read in the Journal of the American Medical Association that Drs. J. E. Fulton Jr., Gerd Plewig and A. M. Kligman of Philadelphia say that they tested 65 persons with a moderate degree of acne, giving some of them a bar containing 10 times the usual amount of chocolate found in the commercial bar, while others got an identical-appearing bar which contained no chocolate. When all of the pimples on one side of each person's face were counted, no difference was found in the numbers on the faces of the persons who got much chocolate and of those who got none.

Interestingly, there were five normal persons who took two enriched chocolate bars every day for one month, which represented a daily addition to the diet of 1,200 calories, of which about half was vegetable fat. This excessive intake of chocolate and fat did not alter the composition of sebum or the output of sebum (the fat produced in the glands in the skin). It is the overly-fatted skin which gets infected with bacteria. Evidently, the taking of an enormous amount of chocolate every day need not make an acne worse.

I read that in the great University of California Medical Centre in San Francisco, a number of older persons, so-called "trained grandparents," are now being employed to help take care of hospitalized children. Their duties range from telling stories or running errands to bringing a glass of water, or cuddling a child. The are paid a little more than $100 a month for a five-day week, of four hours a day.

This may give a good and helpful idea to a number of institutions. Often a small child nearly goes out of his mind when put in a hospital with no clear idea of why his mother apparently deserted him. Some children thus upset nervously will take a long time to recover and to forgive their mothers.

A child in a hospital should be allowed to have his mother stay with him. Certainly, she should be with him if he has to go to an operating room and there be anesthetized. It is terribly cruel to send him alone.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED L. KARPIN

The deal presented today arose in a rubber-bridge game played earlier this year in Paris, France. Our South declarer—who happened to be an American—failed to fulfil his game contract. After South had gone down, North made the comment that South's play was not calculated to improve Franco-American relations. He was right.

East-West vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Nine of ♥.

On West's opening lead of the heart nine, the five was played from dummy, East signaled interest in the suit by playing the seven-spot, and South captured the trick with his king. South then cashed the ace of clubs.

A low trump was led next, West winning with his ace. The eight of hearts was not returned, and East made two heart tricks. When East then played a diamond, declarer finessed, hoping that East was leading away from the king. As is evident, West's diamond king took the setting trick.

As so often happens, South made a misplay at trick one. The opening lead of the heart nine marked East with the A-J; and, in order to gain a tempo, South should have put up dummy's queen.

East would have won this trick with the ace, but he would be unable to return a heart unless he wanted to give South a present of a trick (if East played back a low heart, South would follow suit with a low heart, and dummy's 10-spot would win the trick).

Assuming that East returned a diamond at trick two, South would spurn the finesse and win the trick with his ace. The ace of clubs would then be cashed, after which a trump would be led. West would take his ace and lead, let us say, another heart.

This would be captured by South's king. Now a trump would be led to the board's king, and on the king of clubs South would discard his losing heart. Played in this fashion, South's only losers would have been a spade, a heart, and a diamond.

John turned off the TV. "Andy told me a good one today," he said. "We had lunch together."

"Andy Parsons?" Mary asked, "I heard he was back."

"That's right." Her husband smiled. "He said he'd made his first trip to Paris the year that was the square of his age then."

What age was that?

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

Beaverskin Hats Popular in Europe

By BOB BOWMAN

France tried to colonize Canada and develop trade through private enterprise rather than through the government. A trading monopoly was given to the Company of New France in 1627. It was comprised of 100 wealthy shareholders and became known as the Company of 100 Associates. Despite heavy losses when the company's ships were captured by the Kirke brothers in 1628 and 1629, the shareholders began to make a great deal of money when the Iroquois signed a peace treaty and kept it for a while.

The beaver trade began to boom. Everybody in Europe, it seemed, wanted a beaver-skin hat and the value of the furs exported from Canada rose to 300,000 livres a year. It is difficult to translate this into present-day money, but it would be more than $100,000 a year, and that sum would buy a great deal more then than it does now. It looked as though Canada might really develop because it was estimated that there were 10 million beavers in the country.

One of the reasons why the Iroquois broke the peace was because they suddenly realized that their own trade with the English and the Dutch was being depleted by the Hurons and Algonquins who were supplying the French. When they began interfering with the fur-trade again the Company of New France transferred its trading rights on January 14, 1645, to a group in Canada called The Company of Habitants. It included the leading seigneurs, Giffard, Repentigny, Godefroy, Des Chatelets, and others.

When the Iroquois wiped out the Hurons at St. Ignace and St. Louis they blocked the Ottawa River and not a beaver pelt arrived at Montreal for two years.

This was the beginning of the famous Coureurs de Bois, the men who went alone, or in small groups, on long trips to meet the Indians and trade for furs on their hunting grounds. They had a better chance of getting their furs back to Montreal and Quebec because they could travel down small streams rather than the big rivers, and the Iroquois could not patrol them all. Still, the coureurs had to be brave men, with a love of adventure, and a great desire for cash!

Other events on January 14:

1671—The shortest winter on record began with a snowfall at Quebec and all the snow had gone by the middle of March.

1875 — First issue of Halifax Herald. New school regulations in New Brunswick led to serious rioting.

1898 — Canada was asked to pay one-third of the cost of the Pacific cable.

Kite Enthusiast Seeks World Mark

NEW YORK (UPI) — The president of the International Kitefliers Association has a happy motto that serves him well on his world-wide jaunts: "Nobody hates a kite flier."

This could be open to argument from any cop, fireman or dad who has had to retrieve a kite from a tree or high wire, or any beach loller who's had sand kicked in his face by a kiter dashing along the shore.

But it's hard to talk with 61-year-old Will Yolen, who heads the loosely-knit non-dues-paying association of some 5,000 members, and not catch his enthusiasm for the hobby.

Right now Yolen, of Norwalk, Conn., who has flown kites with maharajahs and ambassadors as well as kite-flying youngsters over much of the world, is getting ready for a kite world championship competition in Sarasota, Fla., on Jan. 17.

On that date the short, dapper retired editor and public relations man will be out to break the world's distance record for kite flying. ("Distance" meaning the length of line played out with the kite aloft.)

The official record is a tough one—five miles, established by the U.S. weather bureau years ago. But Yolen disdains the bureau's method of setting the record.

"The weather bureau used a train of boxkites," he said in an interview. "Every half-mile they would mount another—acutally they used them to measure weather. I'm not interested in that method. I'm going to do it with one kite."

USES FISHING ROD

He isn't the running type of kite flier, either. He casts his kites in the air with a huge tuna-fishing rod equipped with a massive reel, playing them like fishes.

"To try for the record, I'll use 7,200 yards of No. 20 nylon sewing thread—it's very strong and light—with 2,000 yards of No. 10 thread to go up first for leader line.

"If the line is too heavy it will touch the ground and the flier is ruled out. You've got to get a kite with enough surface and strength to carry a line up and out. Once you get it anchored in the sky, you can judiciously lead out your line and get more distance."

The International Kitefliers Association "kite bash" takes place every year on the week of Benjamin Franklin's birthday on the beach in Sarasota. There, kite fliers vie for largest, smallest and most fanciful kites, as well as compete for distance and who can catch the largest fish.

For his distance attempt, Yolen, who stresses "I don't make kites—I don't sell them," is using a new model called a "poster kite" of clear polyethelene mounted on plastic sticks that catches the wind like a windsock or a parachute.

PROMISE FULFILLED

9 IN MEMORIAM

RAY—In loving memory of William, who passed away January 14, 1969.
What we would give to say
"We'll go and see our dad today."
To see his face and see his smile
To sit and talk with him awhile,
But we have lost and God has gained
The best of dads the world contained.
To those who have a husband and Dad
Cherish him with care
You'll never know the heartache
Till you see his empty chair.
—Sadly missed by his loving wife, sons and daughters, and families.

WARWICK — In loving memory of our dear mother, Margaret Marie, who passed away Jan. 14, 1960.
—Ever remembered and deeply missed by Louise, Lorraine and Philip.

Tonight's Top Television Shows

MOVIE TO WATCH this evening is at 7:30 on Channel 8; midnight on Channel 6. The Best of Everything, it's the story of three Manhattan career girls who plunge into the race for financial success, emotional security. It's from a Rona Jaffe novel.

HEE HAW, 7:30, Channel 7. It's twanging time with guests Hank Thampson plugging his record, "Oklahoma Home Brew," and Lynn Anderson cooing "I've Been Everywhere." Grandpa Jones reminisces about his uncle's farm; Minnie Pearl drops a few cornfed witticisms; the Hagers pay tribute to the show's sophisticated writer, Jack Burns; and Buck Owens' boy, Buddy, even sings "Big Mama's Medicine Show" to round out the family hour.

COMEDY SPECIAL, 7:30, Channel 5. "The Shameful Secrets of Hastings Corners." Very funny show. This was the pilot for a comedy series spoofing "Peyton Place" and other continuing dramas. We do not know whether it would have held up on a weekly basis since some of its gags fall flat even here, but as a one-shot it is frequently hilarious and very much worth your time, particularly if you ever watched "Peyton Place." Hall Linden stars in the dual role of an honest DA and his conniving twin brother.

SPECIAL, 8:00, Channel 5. "Gene Kelly's Wonderful World of Girls." Surrounded by chicks like Barbara Feldon and Ruth Buzzi, host Gene Kelly claims this hour will show what women are really like in sketches, songs, and blackouts with twist comic endings. The humorous bits are the most successful—skinny Barbara Heller singing "I Gotta Be Me"; Vegas drummer Kelly knocking his girl-oriented job; Kelly asking for a divorce; Barbara Heller again kidding "Is That All There Is"; and blackouts about the need to translate women's answers. Gene Kelly holds the show in one piece with "How D'Ya Talk to a Girl, Ya Just Listen"; a dance number on women's changing fashions, and a big opener "Thank Heaven for Little Girls."

THE COURTSHIP OF EDDIE'S FATHER, 7:00, Channel 6; 8:00, Channel 4. "The Road to You-Know-Where is Paved with You-Know-What." Character actress Ruth McDevitt and little Brandon Cruz (Eddie) combine to make this an appealing episode. Miss McDevitt, a new tenant in Eddie's apartment building, strikes up a friendship with the lad, but she makes the mistake of cautioning him against dominating his father's days off. The simple story has a moral and the outcome is both heartwarming and realistic.

ROOM 222, 8:30, Channel 4. "Play It Loose." Guest star Nancy Wilson doesn't sing a note in this entry and she's a fairly convincing actress. Miss Wilson plays a top pop singer who dropped out of Walt Whitman High some years back, and is persuaded by Pete Dixon to talk to the kids and convince them that they ought to complete their high school education. The only false note here is a budding romance between Dixon and the voluptuous singer, but it doesn't detract from the story's over-all effectiveness.

THEN CAME BRONSON, 10:00, Channel 5. "A Pickin' an' A Singin'." Some fine tunes make this hour a pleasant one. Bronson teams up with an eager songwriter (Michael Burns) to make a demo record, and it looks as if the young man is about to embark on a highly successful career. There are a few complications, but hardly anything to get fans of this casual show uptight.

DRAMA SPECIAL, 8:30, Channels 2 and 6. This is a rerun of Reddick, last season's well-received production about a minister whose faith is tested. Don Harron stars as the emotionally-beleaguered reverend.

SPECIAL, 9:00, Channel 5. "Rowan and Martin Bite the Hand That Feeds Them." The boys really give TV a going over. With the help of Carol Burnett, the Smothers Brothers, Sammy Davis Jr. and big name cameo guests, Dan and Dick kid the medium's foibles in a funny, overdue outing. The show hits hard right off when Dan and Dick discover TV news is made up and hear creative reporter, Tommy Smothers, take credit for dreaming up the Vietnam war. Carol Burnett is grand as a TV critic knocking moon landing coverage, and Sammy Davis Jr. gets in a few shots on blacks in pictures and TV Quickies on the last day for cigarette commercials have bite, and so do liquor ads, their future replacements. The cast, particularly the Smothers Brothers, enjoy playing fearless TV execs, adept at taking either side, and clever at sending out cancellations. It's a fast, high-priced hour, using a target that's aching to be hit.

TONIGHT'S MOVIES

7:30, Channel 8: The Best of Everything (1959 drama), Hope Lange, Stephen Boyd.

12:00, Channel 6: The Best of Everything (1959 drama), Hope Lange, Stephen Boyd.

WITH 1970
K and C
THERMOGLASS

AND AWAY WE GO!!

17' K and C Thermoglass — did you read about the 15'8"? — well here it is all over again in 17', but much bigger. Do you want to fish Sooke all day? or run home from East Point at 3 in the afternoon? Then try this one on for size — her Vee hull will tame the white waters for you. She's a 17' Thermoglass.

Come out this Saturday and see for yourself. We think you'll agree with us.

New Guerrilla Offensive Anticipated

VIENTIANE (Reuters)—The North Vietnamese, aided by pro-Communist Pathet Lao and rebel Meo tribesmen, are expected to launch a major offensive against northeastern Laos and Thailand early this year, diplomatic and official sources in this Laotian capital report.

Both countries are waging battles against the Communists. In Laos, a civil war has been raging spasmodically since 1949, and in Thailand government forces have been fighting Communist guerrillas for several years.

Diplomatic sources say that more than 1,200 North Vietnamese have infiltrated the strategic Plain of Jars in northern Laos. The crack 312th Division, equipped with modern Russian-made weapons, is believed to have reached the eastern edge of the plain, the sources say.

At the same time, in neighboring Thailand, officials are expecting a big attack in the northeast of the country by 2,000 guerrillas led by Virat Thamthavorn, a Bangkok University graduate in his 40s trained in subversive tactics by Peking.

Operational Base Established

The official New China news agency said recently that the chief of Peking's general logistics department, Chang Tien-Yun, has visited the Chinese border province of Yunnan to make final arrangements for turning the province into a big strategic base for guerrillas in Vietnam, Laos, Thailand and Burma.

The agency's report coincided with another report by the United States that about 7,000 Chinese, including guards and anti-aircraft troops, are working on a new road system in northern Laos.

The Americans said the force is constructing a road southwest from the strategic town of Muong Sai—captured by the North Vietnamese last August—towards Pak Seng on the Mekong River, a distance of about 75 miles.

The Chinese have already built a 50-mile-long road from the Chinese border to Muong Sai and the current work will presumably extend this link.

These activities are of particular concern to Thai leaders, since an existing road in Phong Saly province in northern Laos leads to within 19 miles of the Thai border.

Bargaining for Position

Thai officials agree that both North Vietnam and the Pathet Lao, badly hit by a Royal Lao victory in the Plain of Jars in September, are stepping up their activities to allow them to bargain from a position of strength in any Vietnam war settlement.

Thai officials also drew attention to intelligence reports that 26 North Vietnamese battalions have infiltrated into Savannakhet province opposite the strongholds of the estimated 2,000 hard-core guerrillas in Thailand's Nakhon Phanom and Ubon provinces.

Fighting in Laos in the next few months is expected to centre on the Plain of Jars, although the Communists will be susceptible to bombing because of the lack of cover.

Despite the threatened offensive, sources do not see any immediate threat to the Laotian government. Indications are that North Vietnam's faith in the Pathet Lao as a successful revolutionary movement has dwindled as the campaign continues.

Both the United States government and Laotian Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma have denied that American troops are operating in Laos, but Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese propaganda media have continued to denounce alleged U.S. and Thai military operations there.

SPORTS PARADE

Bigger Names Due in Probe

By MILTON RICHMAN

NEW YORK (UPI) — There will be more names.

Bigger ones, too.

Those four quarterbacks named in the wake of a series of New Year's Day raids designed to break up a national betting ring were only the appetizer. Wait until you see the main course.

Pro football isn't the only sport being asked to co-operate either. Baseball, basketball and boxing also are being looked into as well as horse racing, hockey and harness racing. One of the ironies of our time could be the fact that only wrestling may come out of all this with perfectly laundered linen. Well, near-perfect, anyway. Who bothers betting on wrestling matches?

The next major development in the gambling investigation will centre around the business agents of ballplayers, and when federal agents aim there they can hit practically everybody, because you try naming one big-time ballplayer who doesn't have a business agent these days.

Some of these agents for athletes have been found to know gamblers and that makes them prime targets for investigation the way things are going now. The way they are, in fact, is causing all athletes to look over their shoulders.

Take for example, Jerry Mays, the outstanding defensive end for football's world champion Kansas City Chiefs.

He's the kind of fellow every parent hopes his son grows up to be like. He's bright, polite and perceptive and has exemplary habits. He's tremendously active in the fellowship of Christian athletes and probably wouldn't know a gambler if the guy came up and asked him the way to the ballpark.

Jerry Mays never gave a great deal of thought to gamblers or gambling but he saw how easy it was for implications to be made in inferences to be drawn when one of his teammates, Lennis Dawson, was cited for his casual acquaintance with a gambler arrested by federal agents in one of those New Year's Day raids.

"We get very nervous about some of these people, people we know only casually, I mean," Mays says. "It's so easy for people like this to get in touch with us. You lose a ball game for instance, and some yo-yo calls you up and says, 'You sunovagun, you cost me a thousand dollars when your team lost that game.'.

"At first you don't even realize what he's talking about, but then when it hits you, you say, 'Hey, don't even mention a thing like that on my telephone.' "

The fact is virtually all professional athletes are sitting ducks for anybody who wants to come over to them in a restaurant or call them on a telephone and, seemingly innocently, ask them how they feel.

That doesn't mean everyone who asks a ballplayer how he feels is a gambler in dsiguise looking for some kind of edge. Nor does it mean all gamblers are looking to get their hooks into ballplayers.

The vast majority of ballplayers know as much about odds as the little old lady from Pasadena. They care the same way, too. Point spreads are of uncommonly little interest to most pro athletes. Would you believe Lennie Dawson didn't know the final score of Sunday's game?

That came to light when he was saying some nice things about the Kansas City defence and how well they contained Minnesota. Merely to make sure he had his facts completely right he kept asking, "What was the final score? . . . What was the final score?"

Nobody would have given much thought to the point spread either if he heard Jerry Mays right after the Chiefs upset the Vikings.

"We've been knocked as a league, we've been humiliated and we've had to bite our tongues a few times," he said. "We've taken some really tough barbs, a lot of people have hurt us and kicked us, but thank God in the long run American Football League's and in the last game of the existence it came out on our side.

Jerry Mays put his finger on the AFL patch atop his left shoulder. The patch spread clear across his shoulder pad.

It was the only spread he knew.

Rugged Start For Canadian Open Tourney

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — There's going to be added pressure on the professional golfers in this year's Canadian Open at London July 2-5.

The reason: The 'nines' will be reversed for the $125,000 tournament a the 18-hole London Hunt and Country club.

The switch means the tour players will be starting three of their four rounds in the 72-hole golf tourney from the treacherous 10th hole.

The 10th was rated in a weekly magazine as one of the 18 toughest holes in Canada.

The Royal Canadian Golf Association and the Hunt tournament committee headed by Donald H. Swift reversed the 'nines' to accommodate television coverage.

The last four holes in the tourney for the Seagram Gold Cup—now the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th—will be televised.

Skating Record

ALMA ATA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Soviet speedskater Boris Gulyayev set a world record of 39.03 seconds in the 500-metre event today at the men's speedskating championship in the central Asian city of Alma Ata, Tass news agency reported.

BUD GRANT
. . . coach of year

Rams Get Five On First Team

NEW YORK (AP)—Kansas City Chiefs won the Super Bowl, but the National Football League still dominated the first annual Pro Football Hall of Fame all-pro team.

Although the Chiefs placed four players on the first team, the NFL landed 17 of the 24 positions, and the Los Angeles Rams grabbed five of them. Minnesota, the Super Bowl loser, took only two places, but coach Bud Grant of the Vikings was named the Coach of the Year over the Rams' George Allen.

The AFL, however, did make up some ground on the second team with a 15-9 advantage, including six members of Oakland Raiders.

TWO VIKINGS

Minnesota's selections were centre Mick Tingelhoff and defensive end Carl Eller.

Running back Gale Sayers and middle linebacker Dick Butkus of Chicago led the balloting. Sayers was picked for either the first or second team on every ballot and Butkus missed on only one. The board of selectors consists of 26 sports writers from the pro football cities.

The rest of the first offensive team: running back Calvin Hill of Dallas, wide receivers Lance Alworth of San Diego and Paul Warfield of Cleveland, tight end Bob Trumpy of Cincinnati, guard Gene Hickerson of Cleveland and punter David Lee of Baltimore.

On defence are tackle Bob Lilly of Dallas, outside linebacker Chuck Howley of Dallas, cornerbacks Lem Barney of Detroit and Willie Brown of Oakland and safety Larry Wilson of St Louis.

Injuries Sideline Signal-Callers

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP)—John Hadl for the West and Mike Taliaferro or Jack Kemp for the East were tabbed Tuesday as the probable starting quarterbacks for Saturday's American Football League all-star game.

"We've had our problems at quarterback but believe we have the answers now," said Milt Woodard, the AFL president.

Joe Namath of New York and Daryle Lamonica of Oakland had been selected to direct the all-star attacks but both withdrew with injuries.

Injuries or other problems also eliminated Houston's Pete Beathard from the East squad and knocked Lenny Dawson of Kansas City, Gregg Cook of Cincinnati, and Steve Tensi of Denver out of contention for Lamonica's spot.

Lou Saban of Denver, coach of the West, said he will start Hadl of San Diego and use Mike Livingston, Dawson's understudy with the pro football champion Kansas City Chiefs, as the backup.

George Wilson of Miami, coach of the East, indicated he will alternate Taliaferro of the Boston Patriots and Kemp of Buffalo.

A foot injury also has sidelined Don Maynard, New York Jet receiver who Wilson describes as being among the best in pro football.

The West squad also worked out Tuesday without one of its top receivers, Fred Biletnikoff of Oakland. A virus infection sent Biletnikoff to bed Monday but Saban said he should be ready by Saturday.

The game will be the final official event of the American Football League that next season becomes the American Conference of the merged pro league.

Ed Joyal Out With Injury

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Centre Eddie Joyal, top scorer for Los Angeles Kings with 12 goals, will miss National Hockey League action for three to four weeks because of a cracked bone in his right heel.

The injury was suffered in Saturday game against Minnesota North Stars.

Nothing New In Attempts To End Strike

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — No developments were reported Tuesday in the strike of parimutuel clerks and other workers which has kept both Santa Anita and Bay Meadows closed since their scheduled opening on Dec. 26.

A spokesman at Santa Anita said: "We're getting to an impasse. There has been no contact whatever that I'm aware of."

Uvic Students Outstep FBI

Young Canadians Spirited Home

A cloak-and-dagger University of Victoria rescue team spirited a young Canadian from under the nose of the FBI last weekend.

Led by student council president Norman Wright, the two-man team flew to San Francisco Saturday morning, returning the same day accompanied by Nick George Olah, 21, and his wife Linda, formerly Linda Johnson of Port Credit, Ontario.

Although a Canadian citizen, Olah had been held in the United States for several months on draft evasion charges.

In San Francisco today a court reporter said Olah had been freed on bond last week and had court permission to leave the district. He was scheduled to appear there Feb. 12 on a charge of failing to report for induction into the U.S. armed forces in June, 1968.

Last Wednesday the Vancouver Sun (which published a copyright story of the Olah rescue this morning) ran a letter from the Canadian couple appealing for help.

"We desperately want out of this insane country and to come back home," the letter signed by the young husband stated.

Letter Spurs Rescue Attempt

It was the letter, brought to the attention of Wright at Uvic late last week, that touched off the successful rescue bid.

A telephone contact with the Olahs brought little response.

Mrs. Olah told Wright she had been instructed by their lawyer Michael Kennedy not to discuss the case with anyone because of the U.S. conspiracy laws.

Sensing the hesitancy Wright asked Mrs. Olah if she feared the telephone was bugged.

The young wife replied that there were indications that it was.

Wright terminated the conversation with a promise to send money and renew the contact at a later date.

The next two days were spent checking out the Olah story, raising funds for the rescue bid and planning the hour-by-hour, minute-by-minute schedule.

Wright said the main difficulty lay in establishing contacts in San Francisco.

"I had only marginal contacts with people down there and I had to keep distance between these kids and myself because of the conspiracy thing," Wright said.

Raised Cash for Air Fares

But he did make contact and he did manage to raise $800 toward air fares and additional expenses.

After arriving in San Francisco the cloak-and-dagger effort began in earnest.

First came a change of clothes and a discreet telephone call to the Olahs. A clandestine meeting was set for 1:30 p.m. in Union Square.

The Olahs, under extreme pressure in the U.S. for the past four months, were at first suspicious of Wright. Even proof of identity failed to convince them that he was a fellow Canadian and a friend.

He said his father had put up the $1,000 bail required to obtain his temporary release from jail "and he just can't afford to lose that kind of money."

There was also the fear that fleeing prosecution and jumping bail could be considered extraditable offences leaving Olah open to forced return to the U.S.

And there was still the unspoken fear that Wright really was not who he claimed to be.

Asked when his doubts about Wright finally eased Olah answered "not until the plane actually took off. I never let him out of my sight till then."

Originally Olah was scheduled to leave San Francisco with Wright on the 4:45 p.m. flight. But on arrival at the

TYPHOID STRIKES ORONSAY CREW

VANCOUVER (CP) — The P & O ocean liner Oronsay was held in quarantine for four hours today as health authorities checked the crew and passengers for typhoid.

A spokesman for the line said six crew members taken off the Oronsay at California ports had been confirmed as suffering from the infectious fever. Nine others were reported sick aboard the vessel here.

Judy Says Newsman Destroyed Friends

VANCOUVER (CP) — Judy LaMarsh said in court Tuesday that broadcaster Ed Murphy, who has accused her of libel, wrote stories which "destroyed my friends and brought some of them to their death."

The former federal cabinet minister was testifying as Mr. Murphy sued her in British Columbia Supreme Court over a statement about him in her 1968 book, Memoirs of a Bird in a Gilded Cage.

At issue is her description, in the hard-cover edition, of Mr. Murphy as a "brash young radio reporter . . . heartily detested by most members of the press gallery and members."

Several of Mr. Murphy's colleagues disputed that description of him after it was read into the court records. Asked about it himself Mr. Murphy, 40, said: "I deny that emphatically."

Miss LaMarsh testified: "His friends have told me he is a charming guy. But I know him as a man who wrote stories which destroyed my friends and brought some of them to their death."

She did not explain what she meant but was obviously referring to Mr. Murphy's part in breaking stories of scandals that rocked the Pearson government, in which Miss LaMarsh served, in 1964.

CRITICIZES HIM

The statement in the book came in a section stating that Mr. Murphy had learned that Maurice Lamontagne, former secretary of state, had obtained furniture (from a Montreal firm) but hadn't paid for it.

Miss LaMarsh said Tuesday that anybody who engages in "that kind of journalism" attracts strong dislike. She also said: "It was my firm opinion that it (the statement) was correct."

'They Took Away His Guitar And Forced Him to Turn On'

The father of Douglas Hampton, 18, whose body was found in a Saanich pond Tuesday, said today drugs were forced on his son Saturday night.

John Hampton of 850 Royal Oak Ave. said his son had never taken drugs until the Saturday night he was reported missing after attending a Cordova Bay party.

Friends at the family home today said that when asked to take drugs the boy had at first refused but gave in after his guitar was taken away from him.

They said that if he had taken drugs before, he might have been better able to handle the situation and the tragedy might not have happened.

NO DETAILS

"There are some interesting factors which have developed during the investigation," said deputy chief Robert Peterson. "All of these will be collected and presented at an inquest when it is called."

He declined to say what the "factors" were and would make no comment on the role of drugs, if any, in the case.

Hampton and a friend apparently left the house party about 10 Saturday night and hitch-hiked south on Cordova Bay Road. Peterson said the driver who dropped them at Royal Oak Avenue has come forward but would not say what he had told officers.

HEAR FROM ALL

The deputy said police would be pleased to hear from anyone in the area "who has anything to offer" on the case.

Throughout Sunday Hampton's friends and family searched for the missing boy. Police were called in at dusk. They were joined by soldiers and civil defence workers Monday and the boy's body was spotted at the edge of the pond Tuesday morning.

The pond, on Firbank Farm, is 15 feet at its deepest.

The deputy said that while searchers left many tracks in an adjacent muddy field, there were prints of boots similar to Hampton's.

Is there a possibility of foul play?

"We're not ruling it out," said Peterson. "But there's nothing at the moment to lead us to suspect it."

NOT RULED OUT

Young people questioned by reporters about the incident have mentioned the drug belladonna.

At the request of the Times, Charles Barber of Cool-Aid talked to some who have used the drug. They report the effects are much stronger than those produced by LSD.

"The hallucinations are much wilder. You can lose all

Nigeria today retreated somewhat from an earlier spurning of massive outside aid for starving Biafrans. Gen. Yakubu Gowon Tuesday night called the offers "blood money."

Government officals later explained that Gowon had not condemned international aid from "genuine humanitarians" but said he opposed help from those he felt had aided the secessionist cause from the beginning.

Tons of relief supplies piled up throughout the world today, blocked by Nigeria's stand. A Swedish relief organization said the rejection of aid for conquered Biafra was deliberate genocide.

CANADA INVOLVED

Canada was among the countries stymied. External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said in Ottawa Tuesday the government was standing by with three Canadian Forces Hercules transports, loaded with food and medical supplies and ready for dispatch to Nigeria.

Mr. Sharp declared the crisis was not so critical as it was said to be and he maintained the Nigerian government was justly concerned that it should suffer no outside interference as it tries to reconcile its torn country.

Meanwhile, four Canadian experts in relief and foreign aid were waiting Tuesday night to get reservations on a commercial flight to Nigeria to assist in relief operations and report to Ottawa on what is needed.

LABOR SAYS NO TO PAY FREEZE

TORONTO (CP) — Major sectors of the business community have announced support, with reservations, for the government's anti-inflation policies but there was no immediate indication of a change in organized labor's hard-line position.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Canadian Chamber of Commerce, railways, copper producers and three chartered banks now have promised to try to hold the line on prices and loan charges.

But William Mahoney, Canadian director of the 150,000 member United Steelworkers of America, reiterated labor's belief that wage restraint formulas proposed by the federal prices and incomes commission would only permit the rich to get richer while the poor get poorer.

The federal government has asked industry to delay price increases until March 1.

By JOHN MIKA

British Columbians stand on the threshhold of a new era of the law in their lives.

It will be characterized by a continual and official effort, for the first time, to keep all statutes and legal practice in sensible balance with a rapidly changing society.

The provincial government's Law Reform Commission, heralded by legislation at the last session, is about to begin operations in B.C.

And the federal government plans to introduce legislation this spring to create a national Law Reform Commission to oversee its jurisdiction.

The purpose of both can be summed up as a permanent effort to prove the law need not be an ass.

The B.C. commission can be of great service to the public if it looks beyong reform of "lawyer's law," of anomalies in statute books and obsolescence in legal procedures says UBC assistant professor Jerome Atrens.

That's precisely what it intends to do, says E. Davie Fulton — a one-time reformist justice minister of Canada now in private practice in Vancouver — who is the first chairman of the provincial commission.

'We Will Look Out For Injustices'

Anomalies and archaic court practices will of course be examined and solutions recommended to Attorney-General Leslie Peterson, Fulton said in an interview.

But much ground has been broken by law reform commissions which have been operating five years in Ontario and more than a year in Alberta.

"Of course we will always be on the lookout for areas of patent injustices . . . where the working of the law either no longer accords with what is fair or sensible in the light of developing social conscience or where in fact it militates against an individual," said Fulton.

"Judges have been known to say, for instance, 'this in my view is an unfortunate result but there's the law and I'm not here to make the law, only enforce it'.

"Our commission will always be on the lookout for that but I don't think we can just be concerned with anomalies.

FULTON
. . . reformist

"We will, of course, have to give priority to eight or nine subjects and the sensible starting point that commends itself to me are those areas with the largest impact on the individual.

"The law of sale of goods, the law of landlord and tenant, indeed real property laws generally — those are the sorts of things I feel we will be inclined to start with."

Some of these laws are direct copies of English statutes which were in existence when B.C. was a colony and have since been modified substantially in Britain while remaining intact here.

"They need changing — not because they are English laws but because they are 100 or 150 years old and totally out of date," said Fulton.

Michael Harcourt, a staff lawyer with Vancouver's Inner-City Project, says the poor particularly suffer from the antiquity of many provincial laws regulating business practices on the 19th century laissez-faire principle.

undertaken in this area, Harcourt outlined some of the directions the commission will be urged to recommend.

"The legal doctrine of caveat emptor, which is 'let the buyer beware', is out of date now," said Harcourt. "In the good old farm days you could look the horse in the mouth and test his hooves and you probably had some background in your own community on what you were buying.

"But in today's society there is no way the average Joe knows what is going on in a television set or a car, stereo or furniture of any sort.

"Most buyers today cannot be called reasonable men in the legal sense, because they just don't have the knowledge. The onus should be on the manufacturer of the goods and the seller of the goods while still leaving some responsibility on the buyer to show some prudence and good common sense."

Fulton made it clear that not only statutes will be revieved but also "any (cabinet) regulations having the airport they found the terminal FBI agents looking for a dope-runner who had just arrived from Mexico.

LATER FLIGHT

Wright and the young couple faded to await a later flight.

During the waiting period Linda Olah, still suspicious of Wright, telephoned Uvic to again confirm his identity.

Even here problems continued. The people at the Student's Union Buiiding were reluctant to give out any information on Wright thinking Mrs. Olah an FBI agent.

"They thought I was the FBI looking for information and the more they became suspicious the more I became suspicious," she said.

WRIGHT
. . . organized coup

By 8 p.m. the suspicions still lingered but the Olahs had made their dicision.

They were coming home.

Seats were booked in the name of Mr. Bennett (Wright's cover name) and Mr. and Mrs Johnson, the Olah's cover name.

At Vancouver Olah had to drop his cover and assume his own name to tally name and passport.

As the trio walked out into the main terminal the public address system asked "Mr. Johnson" from the San Francisco flight to report to immigration.

"We just kept on walking," Wright said.

For Olah it could prove to be only a temporary respite from the troubles which started for him four months ago.

The son of a Hungarian freedom fighter who came to Vancover during the revolution Olah was 10 when he took up residence in Canada.

BOTH REMARRIED

Shortly after his father and mother obtained a divorce and both remarried.

When he was 17 Olah decided to visit his father in San Francisco and attended high school there for his final year in grade school.

"It is mandatory for all male high school students to register for the draft," Olah said. "So I complied although I was a Canadian citizen."

After leaving high school Olah made arrangements to attend Sheridan College, Brampton, Ontario. Before he left for Canada he received his induction notice—a notice he chose to ignore.

After a year in college Olah was informed that his father was extremely ill in San Francisco and he and his wife-to-be immediately planned a visit.

That was last August and within days of arriving in California Olah was arrested on an old traffic violation. Checking out that violation the police came across the draft-dodging charge and called in the FBI.

Fined for his traffic violation Olah was told that he couldn't be released until the draft charge was cleared up. He declined to pay the traffic fine.

HELP PEOPLE

Olah says he contacted the Canadian consulate in San Francisco and was informed that "it was not the policy of the consulate to help people involved with the draft."

Olah finally paid a lawyer $750 to arrange $1,000 bail via Olah's father.

"I was shackled and handcuffed and escorted across the city by two marshals," Olah said. "They put a chain around my waist and linked the handcuffs to the chain."

After the hearing Olah was released on bail and a trial date was set for next month.

Kennedy, lawyer for the young Canadian, contacted in San Francisco, said as a lawyer his advice to Olah was to remain in the U.S. and face the charge of draft evasion.

"But as an individual I understand what he did," Kennedy added. "I don't interpret his case as the fault of inadvertently registering, the fault is entirely due to the draft board. He asked for a form to sign because he was a Canadian citizen and did not intend to become a United States citizen.

"It was a deliberate case of the draft board failing to give proper information to him."

During his final weeks in the U.S. Olah in desperation had written to Prime Minister Trudeau for help. He was informed by reply that the matter had been referred to the department of external affairs.

Permits 'Must' Be Issued

The municipal affairs department cannot stop issuing building permits in View Royal.

This information was given the Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health Tuesday after two letters were sent requesting that no building permits be issued.

The board has warned of health hazards from inadequate septic tanks in the unorganized area west of Esquimalt. A sewerage referendum was defeated by View Royal residents last month.

Since the correspondence, the board was told, the Capital Regional District has taken over responsibility for regional planning and building inspection services in the unorganized areas.

Health inspector Laurel Benham said there is one course of action which has always been open to the board—any applications for new construction can only be allowed if the soil on the site is adequate to contain a sewage disposal system.

Ald. Frank Waring of Saanich, elected vice-chairman of the board, said definite action should be taken where septic tanks are not working properly and are a health hazard.

He was told that the senior medical health officer, Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread has the authority to do this.

Dr. Whitbread told the board that if the ground permits and the regulations are met, "we can't refuse building permits.

"We can refuse to grant a permit for an alternate system and this we have been doing, except where it is clearing up an existing problem."

An alternate system, he explained, is adding four feet of topsoil or installing holding tanks for sewage effluent.

In other business, the board decided to write Victoria city council that representatives of the Victoria Medical Society and the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. attend board meetings as "observers," without vote and without voice—unless asked their opinions.

A letter from city council said Victoria is opposed to these representatives being "members" of the health board.

The first attempt, just over three months ago, produced a number of applicants but none of them was hired.

Now, said Mayor Hugh Curtis who is also chairman of personnel committee, the search has been expanded.

The management consultant firm of Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company currently engaged in a study of the municipal administrative structure has advertised in Vancouver.

The position was held by John Bericoff, whose resignation was announced in early October effective Nov. 30 when he became assistant secretary of the Capital Regional District.

ANTI-TV HUSBAND BACKS DOWN

SOUTHAMPTON, England (Reuters) — Ron Ramsbury marched into the local television studios here and dumped his set in protest against programs he did not like.

Tuesday, he asked for the set back. His wife Teenie left him after it went.

Ramsbury, 40, explained: "My wife is an absolute TV addict. She switches it on for the first program of the afternoon and she keeps the set on until closedown.

"I can't stand TV any more . . . but I'll have to put up with it to get my wife back."

A television official brought the set back home Tuesday night and Ramsbury said he had arranged to meet his wife to discuss a reconciliation.

PRICE INDEX RISES AGAIN

OTTAWA (CP) — The consumer price index rose half an index point to 127.9 in December from 127.4 in November, due mainly to higher food and housing costs the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported today.

Neighbors Support Drop-In

The Saanich youth drop-in centre has a new home.

Originally located in a bowling club house at Hampton Park, the new centre is in a municipal house at Hyacinth Park which was converted to a changeroom but is not needed for one year by the parks department.

Ald. Alan Newberry, chairman of the youth committee, said the new centre will be completely under municipal jurisdiction and provide "a second home" for youths to spend evening hours.

He said he has spoken to several neighbors and reported good support for the newly-located centre, which opened Monday night.

DRUG USE RAMPANT IN RICH-AREA SCHOOL

GROSSE POINTE, Mich. (AP) — A random survey indicates that half of the 1,000 high school seniors in this wealthy Detroit suburb have used illegal drugs at least once.

"It's definitely time that our parents become aware that their boys and girls are no longer just playing jacks down in the basement," said school superintendent Theos Anderson.

New Home Recipe Reducing Plan

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of unsightly fat right in your own home. Make this home recipe yourself. It's easy, no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran Concentrate. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full a day as needed and follow the Naran Plan.

If your first purchase does not show you a simple easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't disappear from neck, chin, arms, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow this easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears—how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

Sensational New Hearing Aid Costs Less Than 10 Cents Per Year To Operate

Space age technology has come to the hearing aid industry. A new hearing aid has been developed that actually costs less than ten cents per year to operate. This is a far cry from the $25 to $70 a year the average hearing aid costs to run. Aid also automatically controls speech interfering noises and can be custom adjusted for correct hearing on the spot. WEATHER SYNOPSIS

It was extremely cold in northern B.C. again this morning. Both Fort Nelson and Liard River reported 51 below. Snow continued over most of the interior of the province but Penticton reported light rain with a temperature of 38. Occasional freezing rain occurred at Hope and in the Kootenays. Showers will persist over the south coast today but partial clearing will occur tonight as a ridge of high pressure builds offshore. The Arctic front will remain nearly stationary from north of Cranbrook to just south of Kamloops thence westward across the Charlottes. Snowflurries will persist in most inland areas and along the north coast.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

All of the economists and the stock market experts are wondering whether the U.S. will have a recession this year. We all hope everything in the economy remains prosperous and strong, but some of us are aware that if a recession does come the people in the U.S. are going to be healthier than usual.

That is what has happened in every recession and even in the great depression. Students of trends in public health have marvelled over the many years to learn that during times of business recession the national rate of sickness is lower.

The weather is responsible, in part. The statistics show that when the frequency and severity of storms are lessened, and the temperatures are higher, we tend to have economic recession and less sickness. Some of the steam is gone and people are more relaxed.

By JAMES CONWAY

LONDON (CP) — A visitor wandering off cosmopolitan Soho's better-known tourist tracks into Gerrard Street might think he had strayed into a bustling corner of Hong Kong.

Tucked behind theatre-lined Leicester Square, its narrow sidewalks and colorful store fronts form the heart of London's new Chinatown, the latest foreign settlement in a corner of the city which has absorbed successive waves of emigres from around the world to run its gourmet's gamut of restaurants.

Chinese food—promptly dubbed Chinky chuck by Cockneys—is rivalling fish and chips as a traditional complement to a Saturday night at a favorite pub.

Chinese restaurants and take-out food bars have sprouted like bean shoots across Britain from Penzance in Cornwall to Inverness in northern Scotland, increasing from a few dozen to several thousands in less than 20 years.

To cope with the oriental boom, Britain's Chinese population has swollen to an estimated 45,000. About 60 per cent work as waiters.

MAKE GOOD WAGES

More than 30,000 are from Hong Kong, the majority here as short-term residents working six- and seven-day weeks to support families still living in Britain's colonial enclave on the Chinese mainland.

As British passport-holders, Chinese workers were allowed unrestricted admission until limitations were placed on immigration in 1962.

Waiters can earn as much as £30 a week — good wages here—most of which they send back home. Many return home themselves in six months or so before they become liable to British social security and tax payments.

Mostly they live in cheap rooming houses in run-down areas of North London like Kilburn and Camden Town, unable to afford to live in high-priced Soho.

Unlike other non-European workers such as the West Indians and Pakistanis, the Chinese experience little discrimination or racially-inspired opposition. They form their own rigidly-guarded communities which few Europeans penetrate.

Around the nucleus of the restaurant trade has gathered a wide range of thriving businesses supplying every need for homesick Chinese.

GET SPECIAL RATES

In and around Gerrard Street, there are seven Chinese restaurants; three Chinese barber shops and a beauty salon; several book stores; a Chinese supermarket selling authentic ingredients for traditional dishes, mostly imported from Communist China; a Chinese accountant, and a couple of hire-car companies offering special rates to Chinese seamen.

Some display signs warning non-Chinese they will not be welcome.

The Chinese are almost as avid newspaper readers as their British hosts. One news dealer brings in 2,000 copies of a Hong Kong paper by air freight each day; another circulates several thousand copies of The Overseas China Daily News all over Europe.

On streets radiating off Gerrard Street are other Chinese-run establishments nestling among the seedy clubs, strip joints and coffee shops which typify the less-glossy area of London's West End. Curiously enough, there isn't a traditional Chinese laundry.

Rumors about Chinese-run heroin and other drug rings are discounted by the police who report that the community is probably the least troublesome in the city.

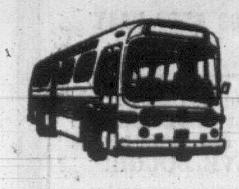

"The last opium raid we made was years ago," said a police official. "But we do look in on gambling from time to time."

Like Chinese everywhere, the ones in London love a gamble. The several hundred waiters footloose after the lunch rush, and before the pre-theatre dinner scramble, crowd the legal and illegal gambling clubs catering exclusively for them, playing mah-jong and a dice game called pai kau for stakes sometimes ranging into hundreds of pounds.

Other money-makers include roulette and a peculiar game described as a cross between bingo and the French Loterie Nationale.

Hydro Blues Tops Hit Parade

The Cypress Bowl Reel Car Insurance Rock Popular

By BRUCE YEMEN

Premier W. A. C. Bennett has zoomed to the top of the legislative "hit parade" in the past two weeks.

He did it without opening his mouth.

The legislative hit parade is a speculative and only fancifully musical listing suggesting which cabinet ministers can be expected to get hit hardest by the opposition on which issues during the first session of the 29th legislature opening next week.

Reels should be fiddled rather than sung, of course, but the opposition can be expected to take a dim view of fiddling, step-dancing and almost every other type of activity related to the controversial West Vancouver ski development.

But it appears that Premier Bennett has taken a firm hold on top spot with a new number, the B.C. Hydro Blues, released just the other day by Dr. Gordon Shrum. Long regarded as a capable Bennett accompanist Shrum found himself in a solo number when he announced a hydro rate increase.

Bennett will probably get most of the royalties from the opposition in the legislature.

With Williston firmly in the second spot, third place goes to Attorney-General Peterson for the Car Insurance Rock, which is what his opponents will claim he pulled when he suggested that car insurance rates would decrease under the government's compulsory insurance plan.

Premier Bennett will probably be identified by the opposition as both composer and conductor, but he may insist that the symphony was accidentally created when a number of government agencies decided to publicize their activities simultaneous with the Aug. 27, provincial election campaign.

The opposition will want to know how much it cost to perform the symphony.

In the fifth spot is a familiar number called the Parkland Shuffle, with a special verse devoted to the trade of timber rights in Strathcona Park for potential new parkland at Cape Scott.

Recreation Minister Ken Kiernan knows all the words to this one by heart.

The second echelon hit-paraders should not be underestimated. They could rise higher in the charts with just a few more spins on the political airwaves.

They are as follows:

6. The Welfare Stomp, performed with dash and panache by Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi, with appropriate gasps from onlookers, including welfare workers and recipients.

7. The Pollution Waltz, in which various government ministers will dance to the tune of the Hesitation Waltz until they're sure the public is ready to help pay the shot.

8. The Education Tango, in which Education Minister Brothers travels to Paris for an international conference and returns to find that it not only took two to make policy in his department — but his temporary replacement, Ray Williston, has announced a complete switch on school construction policy.

9. The Hospital Rhumba, featuring some unusual motion in Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's backfield, which (switching metaphors) will be identified as potential quarterback Dr. Scott Wallace, Oak Bay Socred MLA. Loffmark will be accused of missing some signals on construction of hospital facilities and Wallace too may blow the whistle on him if he goes offside.

10. The Public Works Chant, a traditional hit in which Social Credit theory (A plus B theorem) and other favorite homilies of Public Works Minister Chant will be good-naturedly kicked around. But Chant's public stand against building large city squares (because they encourage riots) will be seriously questioned by Vancouver MLAs.

There are, of course, a large number of "oldies but goodies" whose familiar refrains will waft up to the public galleries.

These include the Anti-Labor Anthem, the Hansard Howl, and the Bill Clancey Twist.

Although the legislature is primarily intended to give the opposition parties an opportunity to give critical if not always fair study to the government's performance, Premier Bennett will probably succeed in leading the Social Credit sing-out group in the most jubilant political tune of all.

It might be enfitled the Ballad of Aug. 27 and it will be great on length, long on repetition and hard on the opposition's ears.

Food Poisoning Epidemic Feared by Health Official

By ROGER STONEBANKS

This warning was given the Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health Tuesday by its senior medical health officer, Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread.

The reason: The board is short five health inspectors and the provincial government has not provided funds to hire them, despite repeated requests.

An outbreak of food poisoning in Spokane, Washington, in 1966 resulted in two deaths, 29 persons treated in hospital and 102 others taken ill.

"There is a serious potential health hazard about the fact we are not able to inspect restaurants and grocery stores frequently," said Dr. Whitbread.

"We cannot accept responsibility and do not accept responsibility of this potential health hazard becoming a real potential health hazard."

Dr. Whitbread said staff shortages affect all programs, not just inspection of restaurants and food stores, and that the potential health hazard was not limited to the one area.

He said barbecued chickens sold in stores, subject of a current provincial study which does not include Victoria, could be a serious food epidemic.

"It's critical," he said. "At any time the potential health hazard could change to an actual health hazard."

The health board has seven health inspectors, plus two supervisors who also do field work, and needs another five, plus two clerks, as well as a number of other staff, including a deputy medical health officer (the previous one left in September and no suitable replacement has been found) and seven nurses.

5 Inspectors 15 Years Ago

Fifteen years ago, the board heard, there were five health inspectors.

The last time the board heard from Health Minister Ralph Loffmark he said the request for more staff was "under study." That was April 24, 1969.

The board asked at its December meeting that staff vacancies be filled as soon as possible. It wrote Loffmark Dec. 18. No reply has been received, one month later.

To overcome the deficiency in provincially-paid staff, the board has had to assign employees paid by Victoria-Oak Bay-Esquimalt into neighboring municipalities.

City-paid health inspectors are being employed as far north as Royal Oak and Mount Douglas, beyond the urban area of Saanich municipality.

"If Victoria said its health inspectors were only to operate in Victoria we would be up the creek," said newly-elected health board chairman Mrs. Rubymay Parrott, of the Saanich Peninsula School Board.

"We were up the creek two years ago," replied Dr. Whitbread, who said the shortage of five health inspectors is in Saanich, Central Saanich, North Saanich and Sidney—the areas paid for by the provincial government.

Shocking Situation: Alderman

Two health inspectors said the shortage means inspections are on a minimal basis, insufficient for the population of Greater Victoria, that inspectors don't have time to check many restaurants and that one man is responsible for all the land from the Highland district west—including Langford, Colwood, Metchosin, Sooke, Jordan River and Port Renfrew.

"This is a shocking situation," commented Victoria Ald. Tom Christie. "It is ridiculous this has carried on so long. Victoria got services before with the Oak Bay-Esquimalt-Victoria arrangement and now this is not so."

Sidney Ald. Norma Sealey said the public is not receiving the protection to which it is entitled.

A report presented to the board said staff shortages have been referred to the provincial health minister in 1966, 1968 and 1969.

"During the past three years, sufficient inspections have not been made of restaurants and food establishments," the report said.

"Last year, one inspection of all these establishments was carried out. Deficiencies in operation were pointed out to the owners or operators.

"More frequent inspections, preferably every three months, and at a minimum once every six months, should be made on a routine basis to ensure satisfactory standards and operations being maintained."

The report said that existing staff is not able to supervise adequately all establishments on the basis suggested by Loffmark in 1968—making readjustments within the limitations of staff already employed.

Mrs. Parrott commented: "We can't accept responsibility for problems in this area if we don't have sufficient staff."

'Take Fight To Rights Commission'

The B.C. Government Employees' Union may go to the B.C. Human Rights Commission to contend the denial of bargaining rights is a denial of basic human rights.

Norman T. Richards, president of the BCGEU, said in Comox Tuesday night the withholding of bargaining rights is a form of disenfranchisement. The provincial government is excluding its employees from voting rights enjoyed by all other organized workers, he charged.

'VITAL' RIGHT

The BCGEU is campaigning to get full collective bargaining directly with the provincial government. At present they must deal with the civil service commission.

Richards said the denial of the right to deal directly with the employer over wages and working conditions was the denial of a "voting privilege" which is "just as vital a democratic right as the vote in a political sense."

MACHINE-GUN MISSING FROM HOME

Police say the firearm is an old navy boarding gun that has a hole drilled in the barrel making it inoperable but they feel it could be fixed to work again.

Deadbeat Charge 'Irrational'

Gaglardi said that deadbeats receiving social assistance were "falling like flies"

Barrett, the NDP leader, said he visited the Vancouver city social welfare single men's unit after hearing the statement. He said only one letter on one of 5,000 cases handled by the unit had been sent from the minister's office and after further review even this man was put back on the assistance role.

The opposition leader charged the minister's political career is "littered with the names of Social Cretit deadbeats' he has used for political patronage". He added that Gaglardi was blustering in an effort to cover up "his complete inability to deal with human problems".

"When I say deadbeats, I mean those people who have jobs or an income and are getting money from the government as well," Gaglardi said in Vancouver.

"I'm not trying to hurt anybody," he said. "I'm trying to get more for the person who needs it."

No More Money Says Loffmark

His comment followed yet another plea Tuesday from the health board for additional funds to overcome staff deficiencies.

"The solution to the problem hasn't changed," he said in a telephone interview from Vancouver.

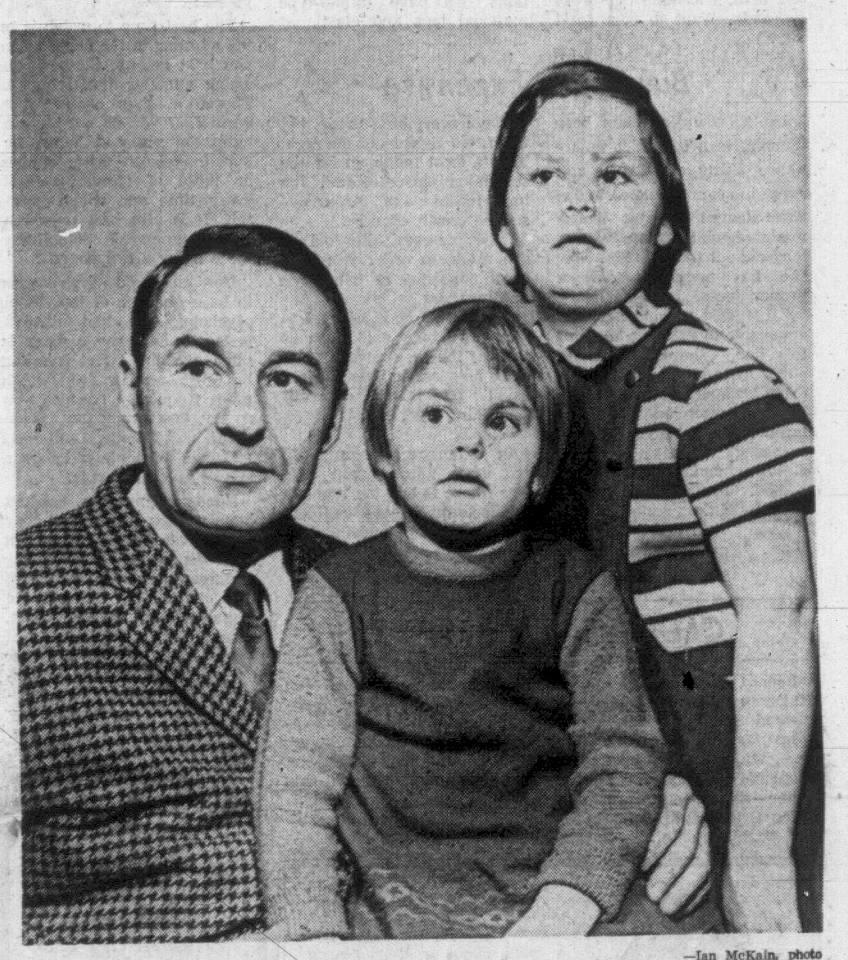

"The fact is and I don't blame the federal government that the federal and provincial governments can't see the upper limits of the cost of maintaining medicare and our hospital services.

"Until we see the upper limits of these costs we are going to have to hold all our medical and health costs somewhere near the existing level of service.

"Secondly. It should be clearly understood that no government can or will go on absorbing increased costs arising from wage demands which are not represented by corresponding increases in productivity.

"As the pattern of wage levels increases, there will be a consequential reduction in services and this applies not only to medical health units but to hospitals, home nursing care programs, grants to voluntary health agencies and so on." Asked if he was saying the answer is no, he replied: "Right." He also pointed out — but emphasized he is not suggesting this — that municipalities could spend less on, say, civic beautifucation, and more on health.

CHILDREN WITHOUT A MOTHER suffer a loss that money can't replace but a Vancouver judge said Tuesday the current law should be changed to make some provision for "love and devotion." Mr. Justice G. T. Gregory was making award to Miklos Kovats of Victoria, shown here with daughters Nora, 4, and Clara, 7. Mrs. Kovats was killed in a car crash.

Judge Can't Compensate for Love

The family life of Miklos Kovats has not been easy since his wife was killed in a local auto accident two years ago.

He has been trying to fulfil the role of both parents for his daughters, Nora, 4, and Clara, 7. But nothing can replace the loss of their mother, and this problem was underlined by Mr. Justice G. T. Gregory in Vancouver Tuesday.

In awarding damages in the accident case, the judge said the provincial law he had to apply should be changed.

He said there should be more consideration given to "things like love and devotion" in the Families Compensation Act, which as it stands made his task "unpleasant" in assessing damages to Kovats, 36, 1674 Warren Gardens.

He awarded Mr. Kovats total damages of $28,098, including $6,250 for damages to himself and two children, $19,427 under the act and special damages of $2,421.

The award was against Timothy John Ogilvie, of Victoria, driver of the other car involved in the accident, and Charles Clark Ogilvie, who admitted liability.

Mrs. Kovats was killed in a head-on collision on Craigflower near Skinner, Nov. 19, 1967.

Kovats, the two children, and Mr. Ogilvie, then residing at 1030 Fairfield, and his three passengers were all injured.

"Surely the time has come when another step forward would be taken and the courts empowered to make some allowance for the real loss which the surviving members of the family suffer when a loved one is killed by the wrongful act of another," Mr. Justice Gregory said.

Kovats is a forester with the provincial government. He hires a housekeeper from 3 to 8 p.m. daily and this is part of the financial burden.

The widower was one of the first groups of Hungarians to immigrate to Canada at the time of the revolution. The entire forestry faculty of his university came to UBC and he subsequently graduated there.

Arthur Mayse . . .

MAN PROPOSES BUT life disposes, as a settled business lady of middle years once surprised me by observing in the course of a cocktail party conversation.

Her point, which she explained before our little group was absorbed by a larger and noisier one, was that the work we do and the lives we lead aren't likely to be those we once planned for ourselves.

This called for a question. What had she planned for herself?

"I firmly intended to become a spy," said this well-ordered matron, just before we were descended upon.

I hoped to learn more about an ambition that got lost in the shuffle . . . and maybe just as well. But the opportunity didn't offer, and I can only wonder how effective she might have been in the risky career that never materialized.

There are, of course, those of us who do make good our early intentions. I suspect, though, that men and women who actually follow through on hope or daydream are hard to find.

Yet, even though I wouldn't trade the hand life has dealt me for any other, once in a long time, a cheated inner presence still makes itself heard.

'Hey,' it protests. 'You crossed me up!'

This is nonsense, and we both know it. I would have made a lousy commercial fisherman, and I abandoned that motion before I had managed to spring myself from high school.

But I still reach for the family binoculars when some tall-poled troller passes on the straits, and watch her out of sight.

There's no harm, and possibly a certain amount of good, in keeping an outgrown dream in storage.

After all, it costs nothing, and can be indulged without the hard work, danger and disappointment that the achieved reality might impose.

It isn't necessary for the thwarted lady spy at the party to consider that she might have blown her first assignment, or been pushed off a subway platform.

For years, it never occurred to me that the wife who is kind enough not to remind me that I would probably hang my imagined troller on a reef might be entertaining a never-never notion of her own.

Then one day she told me that she has not one but two daydreams, and is unable to choose between them.

"Sometimes I'm an archeologist," she said. "I'm down in a trench that everyone else on the expedition has abandoned, and I'm working patiently with a whisk and a little digging tool of some kind. Usually I see it as a nail file. Then I make a discovery. It varies with the location, but it's going to upset all existing theories."

We were toasting cheese sandwiches at the time, comfortably far from that sun-smitten trench with its flies, scorpions, and for all I know, lurking vipers. Even so, I didn't much like the sound of it, and asked her about the other role.

"Well," she said, "I've never considered this seriously. But I like to make people laugh, and you know how fond I am of clowns.

"You mean circus clowns?" I asked.

"Circus, parade, it doesn't matter," she said. "Just so I could wear one of those baggy costumes with the frills and polka dots, and a big nose and flappy feet."

She laid our sandwiches on bread plates and cut them in half. "Of course, I just see the one side of the picture," Win said. "Being a working clown mightn't be all that much fun."

Selfishly, I hope this won't happen in her case, but often enough to prove that they exist, I run into people who have boomeranged back to an early plan for living, and translated it into fact.

I know a writer who did just that.

He kept his hope warm all through his teens, but never got around to testing it. Instead, he put in for a civil service job, and worked his way up to a pretty good rating in his department.

For years, he insists, the idea of writing for a living never troubled his thoughts. Then one day, the long-dormant itch came back. In middle age, he decided that somehow, anyhow, he was going to beat a family's needs out of a typewriter.

He was doing so when last we met. On his bad days, he told me, then, another dream occasionally creeps out of hiding.

In it, he's back in the civil service, up to his ears in the old routine, and drawing a regular pay-cheque!

'WONDERFUL TO BE HOME'

By JACK SCOTT

"Exhausted, relieved and grateful."

These were the emotions of 21-year-old Nick George Olah and his slim, attractive, 23-year-old wife, Linda as they faced their first day of asylum in Victoria.

The pair slept until noon today in the neat, brown clapboard cottage that they asked should be described only as "near a lake in Victoria."

Tall, thin and blonde, wearing stylish corduroy trousers and jackets, the quiet-spoken young Hungarian Canadian said, "We're too tired to think of what our next move will be. We're pretty broke, too. But its wonderful to be home in Canada. Its really beautiful here. I love the peace and quiet of this place. Who knows? Maybe we could make this our home."

Olah said he was grateful for his "rescue" by University of victoria Student Council President Norman Wright.

"I couldn't have left on my own from San Francisco, but I knew I wouldn't have a chance if I'd stayed there," he said, referring to the indictment against him for failing to answer his draft call.

His slight, tall, wife, wearing a blue mini-skirt and high leather boots, her thick blond hair falling to her waist, said that they had packed only essential clothing for their hurried departure with Wright.

Left behind, she said, were pain-killing pills for her husband, who complained this morning of pain in his lungs. Wright had arranged for medication when the couple awoke at noon today.

Olah said they would remain in seclusion for two or three days "to think things over and get rested" and then

Uvic Students Outstep FBI

Young Canadians Spirited Away

A cloak-and-dagger University of Victoria rescue team spirited a young Canadian from under the nose of the FBI last weekend.

Student council president Norman Wright flew to San Francisco Saturday morning, returning the same day with Nick George Olah, 21. His wife Linda flew to Vancouver Monday.

Although a Canadian citizen, Olah had been held in the United States for several months on draft evasion charges.

In San Francisco today a court reporter said Olah had been freed on bond last week and had court permission to leave the district. He was scheduled to appear there Feb. 12 on a charge of failing to report for induction into the U.S. armed forces in June, 1968.

Last Wednesday the Vancouver Sun (which published a copyright story of the Olah rescue this morning) ran a letter from the Canadian couple appealing for help.

"We desperately want out of this insane country and to come back home," the letter signed by the young husband stated.

Letter Spurs Rescue Attempt

It was the letter, brought to the attention of Wright at Uvic late last week, that touched off the successful rescue bid.

A telephone contact with the Olahs brought little response.

Mrs. Olah told Wright she had been instructed by their lawyer Michael Kennedy not to discuss the case with anyone because of the U.S. conspiracy laws.

Sensing the hesitancy Wright asked Mrs. Olah if she feared the telephone was bugged.

The young wife replied that there were indications that it was.

Raised Cash for Air Fares

But he did make contact and he did manage to raise $800 toward air fares and additional expenses.

After arriving in San Francisco the cloak-and-dagger effort began in earnest.

First came a change of clothes and a discreet telephone call to the Olahs. A clandestine meeting was set for 1:30 p.m. in Union Square.

The Olahs, under extreme pressure in the U.S. for the past four months, were at first suspicious of Wright.

Wright terminated the conversation with a promise to send money and renew the contact at a later date.

The next two days were spent checking out the Olah story, raising funds for the rescue bid and planning the hour-by-hour, minute-by-minute schedule.

Wright said the main difficulty lay in establishing contacts in San Francisco.

"I had only marginal contacts with people down there and I had to keep distance between these kids and myself because of the conspiracy thing," Wright said.

Even proof of identity failed to convince them that he was a fellow Canadian and a friend.

He said his father had put up the $1,000 bail required to obtain his temporary release from jail "and he just can't afford to lose that kind of money."

There was also the fear that fleeing prosecution and jumping bail could be considered extraditable offences leaving Olah open to forced return to the U.S.

And there was still the unspoken fear that Wright really was not who he claimed to be.

Asked when his doubts about Wright finally eased Olah answered "not until the plane actually took off. I never let him out of my sight till then."

Originally Olah was scheduled to leave San Francisco with Wright on the 4:45 p.m. flight. But on arrival at the

TYPHOID STRIKES ORONSAY CREW

VANCOUVER (CP) — The P & O ocean liner Oronsay was held in quarantine for four hours today as health authorities checked the crew and passengers for typhoid.

A spokesman for the line said six crew members taken off the Oronsay at California ports had been confirmed as suffering from the infectious fever. Nine others were reported sick aboard the vessel here.

Underground Railway Built in a Hurry

By BOB MITCHELL

University of Victoria student president Norman Wright today told the Times how he and other students organized an underground railway to bring Nick George Olah and his wife Linda over the border to Victoria.

On Thursday, Jan. 8, Nels Granewall, Uvic admissions and awards officer, contacted Wright to ask him whether any help could be given to the pair after he learned of their predicament from a letter to the Vancouver Sun.

By 3:30 a.m. Friday the decision was made to go to San Francisco and bring the Olahs back.

Wright spoke to Linda Olah from Victoria and she told him they had been advised by their lawyer, Michael Kennedy, that if they discussed their case with anyone Nick's bail would be cancelled and he would be sent back to jail on conspiracy charges.

On Friday Wright borrowed money in Victoria, travelled to Vancouver, met a representative of UBC student council, thereby setting up a 24-hour phone connection between San Francisco and B.C.

Arriving in San Francisco at 10 a.m. Saturday, Wright was met by friends of Victoria students who took him downtown to a rendezvous with the Olahs. Wright's mission at this point turned into a cloak-and-dagger-comedy-drama.

Both he and the Olahs were apprehensive of informers sabotaging their plans.

Wright booked tickets for himself and Nick under the phoney names of Bennett and Johnson. Linda was to stay in California as a cover. Wright and Olah had no trouble as they flew from San Francisco to Vancouver direct at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Olah told U.S. immigration officers he was returning to Ontario to visit his parents. Linda came to Vancouver on another flight Monday.

Both are now open to various charges such as conspiracy, and bail jumping.

'They Took Away His Guitar And Forced Him to Turn On'

The father of Douglas Hampton, 18, whose body was found in a Saanich pond Tuesday, said today drugs were forced on his son Saturday night.

John Hampton of 850 Royal Oak Ave., said his son had never taken drugs until the Saturday night he was reported missing after attending a Cordova Bay party.

Friends at the family home today said that when asked to take drugs the boy had at first refused but gave in after his guitar was taken away from him.

They said that if he had taken drugs before, he might have been better able to handle the situation and the tragedy might not have happened.

NO DETAILS

"There are some interesting factors which have developed during the investigation," said deputy chief Robert Peterson. "All of these will be collected and presented at an inquest when it is called."

He declined to say what the "factors" were and would make no comment on the role of drugs, if any, in the case.

Hampton and a friend apparently left the house party about 10 Saturday night and hitch-hiked south on Cordova Bay Road. Peterson said the driver who dropped them at Royal Oak Avenue has come forward but would not say what he had told officers.

The deputy said police would be pleased to hear from anyone in the area "who has anything to offer" on the case.

Throughout Sunday Hampton's friends and family searched for the missing boy. Police were called in at dusk. They were joined by soldiers and civil defence workers Monday and the boy's body was spotted at the edge of the pond Tuesday morning.

The pond, on Firbank Farm, is 15 feet at its deepest.

The deputy said that while searchers left many tracks in an adjacent muddy field, there were prints of boots similar to Hampton's.

Is there a possibility of foul play?

"We're not ruling it out," said Peterson. "But there's nothing at the moment to lead us to suspect it."

Young people questioned by reporters about the incident have mentioned the drug belladonna.

At the request of the Times, Charles Barber of Cool-Aid talked to some who have used the drug. They report the effects are much stronger than those produced by LSD.

"The hallucinations are much wilder. You can lose all

LABOR SAYS NO TO PAY FREEZE

TORONTO (CP) — Major sectors of the business community have announced support, with reservations, for the government's anti-inflation policies but there was no immediate indication of a change in organized labor's hard-line position.

But William Mahoney, Canadian director of the 150,000 member United Steelworkers of America, reiterated labor's belief that wage restraint formulas proposed by the federal prices and incomes commission would only permit the rich to get richer while the poor get poorer.

The federal government has asked industry to delay price increases until March 1.

By JOHN MIKA

British Columbians stand on the threshhold of a new era of the law in their lives.

It will be characterized by a continual and official effort, for the first time, to keep all statutes and legal practice in sensible balance with a rapidly changing society.

The provincial government's Law Reform Commission, heralded by legislation at the last session, is about to begin operations in B.C.

And the federal government plans to introduce legislation this spring to create a national Law Reform Commission to oversee its jurisdiction.

The purpose of both can be summed up as a permanent effort to prove the law need not be an ass.

The B.C. commission can be of great service to the public if it looks beyond reform of "lawyer's law," of anomalies in statute books and obsolescence in legal procedures says UBC assistant professor Jerome Atrens.

That's precisely what it intends to do, says E. Davie Fulton — a one-time reformist justice minister of Canada now in private practice in Vancouver — who is the first chairman of the provincial commission.

'We Will Look Out For Injustices'

Anomalies and archaic court practices will of course be examined and solutions recommended to Attorney-General Leslie Peterson, Fulton said in an interview.

But much ground has been broken by law reform commissions which have been operating five years in Ontario and more than a year in Alberta.

"Of course we will always be on the lookout for areas of patent injustices . . . where the working of the law either no longer accords with what is fair or sensible in the light of developing social conscience or where in fact it militates against an individual," said Fulton.

"Judges have been known to say, for instance, 'this in my view is an unfortunate result but there's the law and I'm not here to make the law, only enforce it'.

"Our commission will always be on the lookout for that but I don't think we can just be concerned with anomalies.

FULTON
. . . reformist

"We will, of course, have to give priority to eight or nine subjects and the sensible starting point that commends itself to me are those areas with the largest impact on the individual.

"The law of sale of goods, the law of landlord and tenant, indeed real property laws generally — those are the sorts of things I feel we will be inclined to start with."

Some of these laws are direct copies of English statutes which were in existence when B.C. was a colony and have since been modified substantially in Britain while remaining intact here.

"They need changing — not because they are English laws but because they are 100 or 150 years old and totally out of date," said Fulton.

Michael Harcourt, a staff lawyer with Vancouver's Inner-City Project, says the poor particularly suffer from the antiquity of many provincial laws regulating business practices on the 19th century laissez-faire principle.

undertaken in this area, Harcourt outlined some of the directions the commission will be urged to recommend.

"The legal doctrine of caveat emptor, which is 'let the buyer beware', is out of date now," said Harcourt. "In the good old farm days you could look the horse in the mouth and test his hooves and you probably had some background in your own community on what you were buying.

"But in today's society there is no way the average Joe knows what is going on in a television set or a car, stereo or furniture of any sort.

"Most buyers today cannot be called reasonable men in the legal sense, because they just don't have the knowledge. The onus should be on the manufacturer of the goods and the seller of the goods while still leaving some responsibiilty on the buyer to show some prudence and good common sense."

Fulton made it clear that not only statutes will be revieved but also "any (cabinet) regulations having the airport they found the terminal FBI agents looking for a dope-runner who had just arrived from Mexico.

LATER FLIGHT

Wright and the young couple faded to await a later flight.

During the waiting period Linda Olah, still suspicious of Wright, telephoned Uvic to again confirm his identity.

Even here problems continued. The people at the Student's Union Buliding were reluctant to give out any information on Wright thinking Mrs. Olah an FBI agent.

"They thought I was the FBI looking for information and the more they became suspicious the more I became suspicious," she said.

WRIGHT
. . . organized coup

By 8 p.m. the suspicions still lingered but the Olahs had made their dicision.

They were coming home.

Seats were booked in the name of Mr. Bennett (Wright's cover name) and Mr. and Mrs Johnson, the Olah's cover name.

At Vancouver Olah had to drop his cover and assume his own name to tally name and passport.

As the trio walked out into the main terminal the public address system asked "Mr. Johnson" from the San Francisco flight to report to immigration.

"We just kept on walking," Wright said.

For Olah it could prove to be only a temporary respite from the troubles which started for him four months ago.

The son of a Hungarian freedom fighter who came to Vancover during the revolution Olah was 10 when he took up residence in Canada.

BOTH REMARRIED

Shortly after his father and mother obtained a divorce and both remarried.

When he was 17 Olah decided to visit his father in San Francisco and attended high school there for his final year in grade school.

"It is mandatory for all male high school students to register for the draft," Olah said. "So I complied although I was a Canadian citizen."

After leaving high school Olah made arrangements to attend Sheridan College, Brampton, Ontario. Before he left for Canada he received his induction notice—a notice he chose to ignore.

After a year in college Olah was informed that his father was extremely ill in San Francisco and he and his wife-to-be immediately planned a visit.

That was last August and within days of arriving in California Olah was arrested on an old traffic violation. Checking out that violation the police came across the draft-dodging charge and called in the FBI.

Fined for his traffic violation Olah was told that he couldn't be released until the draft charge was cleared up. He declined to pay the traffic fine.

HELP PEOPLE

Olah says he contacted the Canadian consulate in San Francisco and was informed that "it was not the policy of the consulate to help people involved with the draft."

Olah finally paid a lawyer $750 to arrange $1,000 bail via Olah's father.

"I was shackled and handcuffed and escorted across the city by two marshals," Olah said. "They put a chain around my waist and linked the handcuffs to the chain."

After the hearing Olah was released on bail and a trial date was set for next month.

Kennedy, lawyer for the young Canadian, contacted in San Francisco, said as a lawyer his advice to Olah was to remain in the U.S. and face the charge of draft evasion.

"But as an individual I understand what he did," Kennedy added. "I don't interpret his case as the fault of inadvertently registering, the fault is entirely due to the draft board. He asked for a form to sign because he was a Canadian citizen and did not intend to become a United States citizen.

"It was a deliberate case of the draft board failing to give proper information to him."

During his final weeks in the U.S. Olah in desperation had written to Prime Minister Trudeau for help. He was informed by reply that the matter had been referred to the department of external affairs.

Permits 'Must' Be Issued

The municipal affairs department cannot stop issuing building permits in View Royal.

This information was given the Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health Tuesday after two letters were sent requesting that no building permits be issued.

The board has warned of health hazards from inadequate septic tanks in the unorganized area west of Esquimalt. A sewerage referendum was defeated by View Royal residents last month.

Since the correspondence, the board was told, the Capital Regional District has taken over responsibility for regional planning and building inspection services in the unorganized areas.

Health inspector Laurel Benham said there is one course of action which has always been open to the board—any applications for new construction can only be allowed if the soil on the site is adequate to contain a sewage disposal system.

Ald. Frank Waring of Saanich, elected vice-chairman of the board, said definite action should be taken where septic tanks are not working properly and are a health hazard.

He was told that the senior medical health officer, Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread has the authority to do this.

Dr. Whitbread told the board that if the ground permits and the regulations are met, "we can't refuse building permits.

"We can refuse to grant a permit for an alternate system and this we have been doing, except where it is clearing up an existing problem."

An alternate system, he explained, is adding four feet of topsoil or installing holding tanks for sewage effluent.

In other business, the board decided to write Victoria city council that representatives of the Victoria Medical Society and the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. attend board meetings as "observers," without vote and without voice—unless asked their opinions.

A letter from city council said Victoria is opposed to these representatives being "members" of the health board.

The first attempt, just over three months ago, produced a number of applicants but none of them was hired.

Now, said Mayor Hugh Curtis who is also chairman of personnel committee, the search has been expanded.

The management consultant firm of Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company currently engaged in a study of the municipal administrative structure has advertised in Vancouver.

The position was held by John Bericoff, whose resignation was announced in early October effective Nov. 30 when he became assistant secretary of the Capital Regional District.

might return to Brampton, Ontario, where Nick is to enrol in a course of creative photography.

Wright told the Times that the small cottage had been loaned by a friend sympathetic to the Olah's dilemma, but that they would probably remain no more than two days at the retreat.

Olah said he had fled with the approval of his father in San Francisco. "He knows what prison is like from his days behind the iron curtain," he said, "and gave me his blessing."

Neighbors Support Drop-In

The Saanich youth drop-in centre has a new home.

Originally located in a bowling club house at Hampton Park, the new centre is in a municipal house at Hyacinth Park which was converted to a changeroom but is not needed for one year by the parks department.

Ald. Alan Newberry, chairman of the youth committee, said the new centre will be completely under municipal jurisdiction and provide "a second home" for youths to spend evening hours.

He said he has spoken to several neighbors and reported good support for the newly-located centre, which opened Monday night.

New Home Recipe Reducing Plan

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of unsightly fat right in your own home. Make this home recipe yourself. It's easy, no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran Concentrate. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full a day as needed and follow the Naran Plan.

If your first purchase does not show you a simple easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't disappear from neck, chin, arms, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow this easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears—how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

Sensational New Hearing Aid Costs Less Than 10 Cents Per Year To Operate

Space age technology has come to the hearing aid industry. A new hearing aid has been developed that actually costs less than ten cents per year to operate. This is a far cry from the $25 to $70 a year the average hearing aid costs to run. Aid also automatically controls speech interfering noises and can be custom adjusted for correct hearing on the spot. WEATHER SYNOPSIS

It was extremely cold in northern B.C. again this morning. Both Fort Nelson and Liard River reported 51 below. Snow continued over most of the interior of the province but Penticton reported light rain with a temperature of 38. Occasional freezing rain occurred at Hope and in the Kootenays. Showers will persist over the south coast today but partial clearing will occur tonight as a ridge of high pressure builds offshore. The Arctic front will remain nearly stationary from north of Cranbrook to just south of Kamloops thence westward across the Charlottes. Snowflurries will persist in most inland areas and along the north coast.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

All of the economists and the stock market experts are wondering whether the U.S. will have a recession this year. We all hope everything in the economy remains prosperous and strong, but some of us are aware that if a recession does come the people in the U.S. are going to be healthier than usual.

That is what has happened in every recession and even in the great depression. Students of trends in public health have marvelled over the many years to learn that during times of business recession the national rate of sickness is lower.

The weather is responsible, in part. The statistics show that when the frequency and severity of storms are lessened, and the temperatures are higher, we tend to have economic recession and less sickness. Some of the steam is gone and people are more relaxed.

New Schedule For Ferries In Effect

A new schedule for B.C. ferries started Monday and will be in effect until the Easter holidays when a new one will begin for the period March 24 to April 5.

Copies of the new schedule, designed to accommodate business and tourist traffic during the winter months, are available at ferry terminals, automobile clubs, hotels, motels and visitors' information bureaus.

Sailings from Sqartz Bay (Victoria) to Tsawwassen (Vancouver) now are:

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, every two hours from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. with extra sailings at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

On Thursday, sailings every two hours from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. with extra sailings at 4 p.m. and 8 p.m.

FRIDAY SAILINGS

Friday, sailings in the morning at 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 noon and, in the afternoon, hourly from 1 to 10 except 2 p.m.

Saturday, at 7, 8, 9, 11 a.m. and 12 noon and, in the afternoon, every two hours from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Sunday, at 7, 8, 9, 11 a.m. and noon and, in the afternoon, from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m. with no 2 p.m. trip.

From Tsawwassen to Victoria:

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday every two hours from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. with extra sailings at 8 a.m. and noon.

On Thursday every two hours from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. with extra sailings at 6 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Extra Trips

On Friday, every two hours from 7 a.m, to 11 a.m. with an extra sailing at 10 a.m., and, in the afternoon, hourly sailings from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m.

On Saturday, every two hours from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. with extra sailings at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

On Sunday, every two hours from 7 a.m. to 11 a.m. with an extra sailing at 10 a.m. and, hourly sailings from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Limits Approved

VANCOUVER (CP) — The board of governors of the University of B.C. has approved a recommendation which will limit the 1970 freshman enrolment to 3,400 students. The new ruling will reduce the number of first-year students entering UBC for the first time by about 300.

THIEVES GIVE GOOD SERVICE

GRIMSBY, England (UPI) — Thieves stole several thousand dollars from a local bank night deposit safe and then attached a wooden box for late depositers with a sign advising them:

"The night safe is temporarily out of order. Customers are invited to use the temporary box provided."

Museum Lectures Set

A series of illustrated lectures will be held at the Newcombe Auditorium in the Provincial Museum beginning Friday Feb. 6 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Sydney W. Jackman of the University of Victoria will give the first talk on the historian and the history of British Columbia.

Other lectures in the series will be: Feb. 13, The Art of Willie Seaweed, a Kwakiutl Master; Feb. 27, recent geological events on the Victoria-Saanich peninsula; March 13, early prehistoric population movements into the Pacific Northwest; March 20, A Visit to the Home of Bakbakwalanooksiwae, The Cannibal-at-the-North-End-of-the-World; and March 27, Songs of the Caribou Argonauts.

CANADIANS OUTSTEP FBI

Dramatic Flight to Victoria

Uvic Students Play Key Role

By JIM HUME

A cloak-and-dagger University of Victoria rescue team spirited a young Canadian from under the nose of the FBI last weekend.

Student council president Norman Wright flew to San Francisco Saturday morning, returning the same day with Nick George Olah, 21. His wife Linda flew to Vancouver Monday.

Although a Canadian citizen, Olah had been held in the United States for several months on draft evasion charges.

In San Francisco today a court reporter said Olah had been freed on bond last week and had court permission to leave the district. He was scheduled to appear there Feb. 12 on a charge of failing to report for induction into the U.S. armed forces in June, 1968.

Last Wednesday the Vancouver Sun (which published a copyright story of the Olah rescue this morning) ran a letter from the Canadian couple appealing for help.

"We desperately want out of this insane country and to come back home," the letter signed by the young husband stated.

Letter Spurs Rescue Attempt

It was the letter, brought to the attention of Wright at Uvic late last week, that touched off the successful rescue bid.

A telephone contact with the Olahs brought little response.

Mrs. Olah told Wright she had been instructed by their lawyer Michael Kennedy not to discuss the case with anyone because of the U.S. conspiracy laws.

Sensing the hesitancy Wright asked Mrs. Olah if she feared the telephone was bugged.

The young wife replied that there were indications that it was.

Wright terminated the conversation with a promise to send money and renew the contact at a later date.

The next two days were spent checking out the Olah story, raising funds for the rescue bid and planning the hour-by-hour, minute-by-minute schedule.

Wright said the main difficulty lay in establishing contacts in San Francisco.

"I had only marginal contacts with people down there and I had to keep distance between these kids and myself because of the conspiracy thing," Wright said.

Raised Cash for Air Fares

But he did make contact and he did manage to raise $800 toward air fares and additional expenses.

After arriving in San Francisco the cloak-and-dagger effort began in earnest.

First came a change of clothes and a discreet telephone call to the Olahs. A clandestine meeting was set for 1:30 p.m. in Union Square.

The Olahs, under extreme pressure in the U.S. for the past four months, were at first suspicious of Wright. Even proof of identity failed to convince them that he was a fellow Canadian and a friend.

He said his father had put up the $1,000 bail required to obtain his temporary release from jail "and he just can't afford to lose that kind of money."

There was also the fear that fleeing prosecution and jumping bail could be considered extraditable offences leaving Olah open to forced return to the U.S.

And there was still the unspoken fear that Wright really was not who he claimed to be.

Asked when his doubts about Wright finally eased Olah answered "not until the plane actually took off. I never let him out of my sight till then."

Originally Olah was scheduled to leave San Francisco with Wright on the 4:45 p.m. flight. But on arrival at the

By BOB MITCHELL

University of Victoria student president Norman Wright today told the Times how he and other students organized an underground railway to bring Nick George Olah and his wife Linda over the border to Victoria.

On Thursday, Jan. 8, Nels Granewall, Uvic admissions and awards officer, contacted Wright to ask him whether any help could be given to the pair after he learned of their predicament from a letter to the Vancouver Sun.

By 3:30 a.m. Friday the decision was made to go to San Francisco and bring the Olahs back.

Wright spoke to Linda Olah from Victoria and she told him they had been advised by their lawyer, Michael Kennedy, that if they discussed their case with anyone Nick's bail would be cancelled and he would be sent back to jail on conspiracy charges.

On Friday Wright borrowed money in Victoria, travelled to Vancouver, met a representative of UBC student council, thereby setting up a 24-hour phone connection between San Francisco and B.C.

Arriving in San Francisco at 10 a.m. Saturday, Wright was met by friends of Victoria students who took him downtown to a rendezvous with the Olahs. Wright's mission at this point turned into a cloak-and-dagger-comedy-drama.

Both he and the Olahs were apprehensive of informers sabotaging their plans.

Wright booked tickets for himself and Nick under the phoney names of Bennett and Johnson. Linda was to stay in California as a cover. Wright and Olah had no trouble as they flew from San Francisco to Vancouver direct at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Olah told U.S. immigration officers he was returning to Ontario to visit his parents. Linda came to Vancouver on another flight Monday.

Both are now open to various charges such as conspiracy, and bail jumping.

'WONDERFUL TO BE HOME'

By JACK SCOTT

"Exhausted, relieved and grateful."

These were the emotions of 21-year-old Nick George Olah and his slim, attractive, 23-year-old wife, Linda as they faced their first day of asylum in Victoria.

The pair slept until noon today in the neat, brown clapboard cottage that they asked should be described only as "near a lake in Victoria."

Tall, thin and blonde, wearing stylish corduroy trousers and jackets, the quiet-spoken young Hungarian Canadian said, "We're too tired to think of what our next move will be. We're pretty broke, too. But its wonderful to be home in Canada. Its really beautiful here. I love the peace and quiet of this place. Who knows? Maybe we could make this our home."

Olah said he was grateful for his "rescue" by University of Victoria Student Council President Norman Wright.

"I couldn't have left on my own from San Francisco, but I knew I wouldn't have a chance if I'd stayed there," he said, referring to the indictment against him for failing to answer his draft call.

His slight, tall, wife, wearing a blue mini-skirt and high leather boots, her thick blond hair falling to her waist, said that they had packed only essential clothing for their hurried departure with Wright.

Left behind, she said, were pain-killing pills for her husband, who complained this morning of pain in his lungs. Wright had arranged for medication when the couple awoke at noon today.

Olah said they would remain in seclusion for two or three days "to think things over and get rested" and then

LABOR SAYS NO TO PAY FREEZE

TORONTO (CP) — Major sectors of the business community have announced support, with reservations, for the government's anti-inflation policies but there was no immediate indication of a change in organized labor's hard-line position.

But William Mahoney, Canadian director of the 150,000 member United Steelworkers of America, reiterated labor's belief that wage restraint formulas proposed by the federal prices and incomes commission would only permit the rich to get richer while the poor get poorer.

The federal government has asked industry to delay price increases until March 1.

'They Took Away His Guitar And Forced Him to Turn On'

The father of Douglas Hampton, 18, whose body was found in a Saanich pond Tuesday, said today drugs were forced on his son Saturday night.

John Hampton of 850 Royal Oak Ave., said his son had never taken drugs until the Saturday night he was reported missing after attending a Cordova Bay party.

Friends at the family home today said that when asked to take drugs the boy had at first refused but gave in after his guitar was taken away from him.

They said that if he had taken drugs before, he might have been better able to handle the situation and the tragedy might not have happened.

"There are some interesting factors which have developed during the investigation," said deputy chief Robert Peterson. "All of these will be collected and presented at an inquest when it is called."

He declined to say what the "factors" were and would make no comment on the role of drugs, if any, in the case.

Hampton and a friend apparently left the house party about 10 Saturday night and hitch-hiked south on Cordova Bay Road. Peterson said the driver who dropped them at Royal Oak Avenue has come forward but would not say what he had told officers.

The deputy said police would be pleased to hear from anyone in the area "who has anything to offer" on the case.

Throughout Sunday Hampton's friends and family searched for the missing boy. Police were called in at dusk. They were joined by soldiers and civil defence workers Monday and the boy's body was spotted at the edge of the pond Tuesday morning.

The pond, on Firbank Farm, is 15 feet at its deepest.

The deputy said that while searchers left many tracks in an adjacent muddy field, there were prints of boots similar to Hampton's.

Is there a possibility of foul play?

"We're not ruling it out," said Peterson. "But there's nothing at the moment to lead us to suspect it."

Young people questioned by reporters about the incident have mentioned the drug belladonna.

At the request of the Times, Charles Barber of Cool-Aid talked to some who have used the drug. They report the effects are much stronger than those produced by LSD.

"The hallucinations are much wilder. You can lose all

Commissions to Prove Law Need Not Be an Ass

By JOHN MIKA

British Columbians stand on the threshhold of a new era of the law in their lives.

It will be characterized by a continual and official effort, for the first time, to keep all statutes and legal practice in sensible balance with a rapidly changing society.

The provincial government's Law Reform Commission, heralded by legislation at the last session, is about to begin operations in B.C.

And the federal government plans to introduce legislation this spring to create a national Law Reform Commission to oversee its jurisdiction.

The purpose of both can be summed up as a permanent effort to prove the law need not be an ass.

The B.C. commission can be of great service to the public if it looks beyond reform of "lawyer's law," of anomalies in statute books and obsolescence in legal procedures says UBC assistant professor Jerome Atrens.

That's precisely what it intends to do, says E. Davie Fulton — a one-time reformist justice minister of Canada now in private practice in Vancouver — who is the first chairman of the provincial commission.

Anomalies and archaic court practices will of course be examined and solutions recommended to Attorney-General Leslie Peterson, Fulton said in an interview.

But much ground has been broken by law reform commissions, which have been operating five years in Ontario and more than a year in Alberta.

'We Will Look Out For Injustices'

"Of course we will always be on the lookout for areas of patent injustices where the working of the law either no longer accords with what is fair or sensible in the light of developing social conscience or where in fact it militates against an individual," said Fulton.

"Judges have been known to say, for instance, 'this in my view is an unfortunate result but there's the law and I'm not here to make the law, only enforce it'.

"Our commission will always be on the lookout for that but I don't think we can just be concerned with anomalies.

"We will, of course, have to give priority to eight or nine subjects and the sensible starting point that commends itself to me are those areas with the largest impact on the individual.

"The law of sale of goods, the law of landlord and tenant, indeed real property laws generally — those are the sorts of things I feel we will be inclined to start with."

Some of these laws are direct copies of English statutes which were in existence when B.C. was a colony and have since been modified substantially in Britain while remaining intact here.

"They need changing — not because they are English laws but because they are 100 or 150 years old and totally out of date," said Fulton.

Michael Harcourt, a staff lawyer with Vancouver's Inner-City Project, says the poor particularly suffer from the antiquity of many provincial laws regulating business undertaken in this area. Harcourt outlined some of the practices on the 19th century laissez-faire principle.

While Fulton felt it improper to speculate on the specific reforms that might be directions the commission will be urged to recommend.

"The legal doctrine of caveat emptor, which is 'let the buyer beware', is out of date now," said Harcourt. "In the good old farm days you could look the horse in the mouth and test his hooves and you probably had some background in your own community on what you were buying.

"But in today's society there is no way the average Joe knows what is going on in a television set or a car, stereo or furniture of any sort.

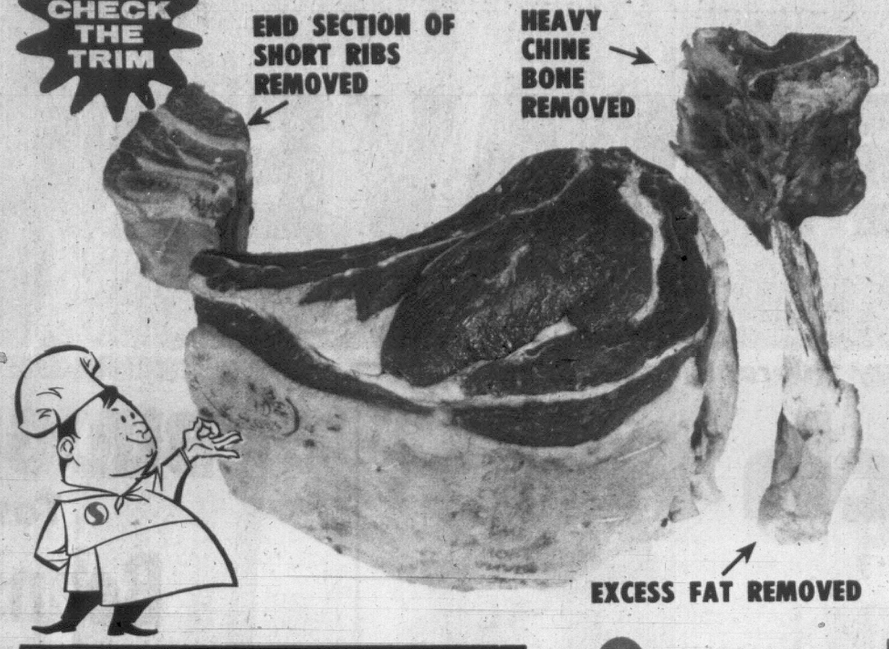

"Most buyers today cannot be called reasonable men in the legal sense, because they just don't have the knowledge. The onus should be on the manufacturer of the goods and the seller of the goods while still leaving some responsibility on the buyer to show some prudence and good common sense."

Fulton made it clear that not only statutes will be revieved but also "any (cabinet) regulations having the
